TOKIO DENIES SEIZED ARMS WERE SOLD TO CHANG TSO-LIN

Still Under Close Guard At Vladivostok, Claim

NO AID TO WHITES

Court Martial Will Clarify Situation, Says Statement

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, Oct. 18.—The Japanese Legation has issued the following statement by the Japanese Government regarding the reported disposal of arms in the custody of the Japanese military command in Siberia:

"Since September 24 there have appeared various statements in the newspapers concerning the arms and munitions placed under the custody of the Japanese expeditionary force and those seized by the latter, the gravamen of the accusation being that part of these arms have been supplied by the military authorities to a third party in pursuance of some premeditated scheme. Although utterly preposterous, these statements have led to diverse discussions and have created doubt and suspicion in the public mind. It may not, therefore, be amiss to clarify such facts in the case as have given rise to these allegations.

"1.—The seized arms and munitions are those which the Japanese expeditionary force took under its control immediately after the disarming of the Russian forces at Vladivostok in April of 1920 as a measure necessary for the maintenance of peace and order and by special agreement with the Russian authorities of that time. Such of the articles seized at the time as were not of direct use for warfare were later handed back to the Russians.

AT VLADIVOSTOK

On the other hand, arms seized at other localities were all brought together at Vladivostok in 1921. The total amount of the arms and munition thus seized and kept by the expeditionary force, consisting principally of rifles, guns, ammunition and grenades, amounts to 300,000 tons. These arms and munitions having been placed in its custody under such circumstances, the Japanese expeditionary force, knowing that it has not the authority to dispose of them at will, has done nothing beyond keeping strict watch over them, although in accordance with the terms of the aforementioned agreement a small quantity of arms and ammunition was delivered to several police organisations at Vladivostok.

In the face of the above fact, it has been rumored that the expeditionary force has supplied the Vladivostok Government or a Chinese faction out of these seized arms. Investigation shows that several car loads of arms were transported from Changchun to Mukden. But in view of the result of an investigation at Pogranitchnaya, as well as the fact that the seized arms at Vladivostok remain untouched, the inference that the expeditionary force had anything to do with the arms arriving at Mukden could not possibly have had any basis on fact.

As to the question of the Russian red cross train, consisting of thirty-two cars, around which has centered such discussion the fact is that on August 30 the said train having left Vladivostok without notice, the field communications department of the expeditionary force, in pursuance of the agreement with the Russian railway authorities for preventing the scattering of rolling stock, took steps for the detention of the train at the boundary town of Pogranitchnaya. Early in September, however, the preparations for evacuation of the expeditionary force having made favorable progress, and a sufficient supply of cars having been secured, it was found unnecessary to detain the red cross train any longer, and it was dismissed on September 8.

According to the statement of the Russian authorities, the train carried sanitary supplies, clothing, provisions and household utensils for the relief of the Russians around Hailar.

WRONG ASSUMPTION

In this connection it must be mentioned that while it seems to be the general assumption that the Japanese expeditionary force ought naturally to be cognisant of the articles carried by the Ussuri and Chinese Eastern Railways, this

A Romantic Trek From The Land of The Midnight Sun Through The Heart Of Asia, The Fantastic Land of Mongolia, And Mysterious Thibet To Shanghai.

XII—HUNTING MOUNTAIN SHEEP

By Larry Lehrbas

Mongolia, to the sportsman, is the happy hunting ground. Large herds of gazelles flick their heels about the foothills, hundreds of antelope dart about the prairies, a profusion of wild game inhabits mountains and plains—and in the high, lofty crags of the numerous mountain chains that cross and recross the picturesque country are that game of game—wild mountain sheep.

When Serge and his companions in the cavalcade received an invitation to go hunting with the Kirei chieftain they accepted with ready enthusiasm. On their trek from the Northern limits of Russia, across the mountain divide into Mongolia and to Guencher they had snared or shot many varieties of small game, and once or twice had killed an antelope, but mountain sheep, jumping from crag to crag in the most lofty mountains, had been beyond their reach until the Kirei chief's invitation.

Leaving their encampment early on a June morning they travelled South to the Altai chain that ends in the fierce, burning sands of the Gobi Desert, arriving too late that night to do more than hunt around for tracks of the majestic kings of the mountain fastnesses.

Bright and early the next morning the three Russians, with the Kirei chief and a bevy of guides and hunters, began climbing the mountains, with eyes peeled for a sight of the sheep nibbling the mountain-side grass or resting on some rearing peak. For over three hours they searched without avail. If there was a single sheep in the mountains it appeared to have climbed into some ancient cave or nimbly hopped onto another chain. They were just on the point of giving up in disgust—as they had planned with the other members of the caravan to be back that night—when one of the Kirei hunters suddenly spotted a moving speck on a distant crag which he swore was a sheep.

MOUNTAIN PATRIARCHS

At that time they were more than a quarter of a mile away, down wind. At first alarm they had thrown themselves to the ground, and now the entire band of hunters began wiggling and crawling along on their stomachs toward the nibbling sheep. For almost an hour they crawled along with beating hearts, fearful that the wind would shift and the alarmed sheep would do darting go. Every few minutes one of the guides would toss a few strands of wool he carried in his belt into the air—testing the wind—to make sure that the vagrant breeze would not shift and disclose their approach to the sheep.

Once Serge slowly lifted his head, and braced on his hands, gazed at the deeding sheep. His heart almost stopped beating! There beside the sheep they had seen and not hundred years away, were five other sheep, resting on the ground alongside the eater. Such a sight is enough to give the most experienced hunter that variety of nervous funk called 'buck fever.' The feeding sheep stopped nibbling now and again to peer into the distance, looking from side to side, his horns—they later proved to have to be 40 incr ones, but Serge imagined they were at least forty feet—seeming to cause the sheep's head to droop from their weight.

Serge, thrilled beyond all words at his first close sight of the mountain patriarchs, forgot that he carried a gun. He was not awakened to the fact until their was a terrific roar near him as one of the Kirei fired off his old muzzle-loader, and the sheep seemed to rise on wings and disappear in the surrounding crags. One went just as quickly as the others but it left behind it as it ran a tell-tale stream of crimson. Serge at first thought the sheep had escaped and berated himself soundly for not having fired, but the Kirei guides intimated by 'playing dead' that they would find the big sheep dead further on the trail. An hour later, after climbing over numerous rocky heights they came upon the dead sheep. It was then that Serge marvelled that it had been able to run all that way, for it had a great, gaping wound in its side.

While the three Russians and the Kirei chief began a hurried climb down the mountain and back to their encampment the guides and hunters cleaned the head and followed them into camp an hour or two afterward late that night.

KIREI FALCONRY

The heart of Asia is said to be the original home of Falconry and Serge and others in the calvacade listened to many stirring tales of thrilling 'kills' by the falcons

SOVIET REFUSES TO GIVE UP LOOT STOLEN IN POLAND

Mission Returns From Moscow After Failure To Sign Pact

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, Oct. 20.—Speaking of the foreign relations of Poland, M. Marutowitz emphasised that the relations with Esthonia were friendly and that no conflict had ever arisen between her and Poland. The relations with Lettonia had appreciably improved since the conference at Warsaw.

The Polish newspapers publish the declarations of General Sikorski on his return from France, stating: "Present relations between France and Poland rest primarily on a real community of interests between the two nations but at the same time on the basis of ancient and traditional friendship, sealed by the firm alliance of the two national consciences."

A commission of Polish experts has returned from Moscow after negotiating in vain for four months on the situation. The Soviets continue to retain the paintings, great collections and libraries as well as the machinery of the Polish factories which was removed from Poland at the time of the retreat in 1915.

MINSTRELS READY FOR CURTAIN RISE NEXT WEDNESDAY

"Shriner Darkies" Have Show Well In Hand

With the final touches being put on the newly painted scenery for the first act, and the drops and curtain all done, the executives of Nomad Oasis feel that little more is to be done to make the Shriners' Minstrel show ready for the opening performance Wednesday night.

A select orchestra has been appointed, among whom are numbered several of the Petrograd Conservatory later classes. Messrs. R. Sevceck, on the clarinet; his brother, P. Sevceck, on the trombone; Mareck and Kosnetsof, bass viol and violin respectively, have all been graduated from this institute. The leader Mr. V. Desoit and G. W. Warn have been with Pacific Coast orchestras. They are working with the chorus to get the most harmonious and euphonious results.

The intermission will include the following offering: Mr. E. P. Graham-Barrow, in one of his monologues; the Pianoblends, in rag and jazz; the darky Preacher Mista Rev. Kimball, with an appropriate text and sermon, followed by "The Man who Looks like Me," being the vehicle for Messrs. Raynes, Currens, and Hanna. Mr. Wynn in the Babe Ruth of Minstrelsy closes the olio.

The show is being given for the public of Shanghai under the auspices of the local Shrine Club. All Shanghai is welcome at the performances at the Olympic Theater, Wednesday to Saturday next.

GERMAN POLITICS

(French Wireless)

Paris, Oct. 20.—Counsellor Escderic addresses an open letter to President Ebert, which is published in the Lokalanzeiger, asking him to defer until 1924 the referendum for the renewal of the Presidential term. He protests against the decision take by the majority of party chiefs and declares that if this is voted by the Government it would constitute a violation of the Constitution.

NEW COMPANY INDEPENDENT AND WILL ONLY HELP BANQUE

Manager Explains Opening Of Indo-China 'Branches'

NOT YET RATIFIED

Propaganda Needed Here, To Save "Rush Of Creditors"

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Peking, October 18.—Reuter's representative had an interview yesterday with Mr. Sellier, local Manager of the Banque Industrielle de Chine, when the following questions were put to Mr. Sellier and the following answers received:

Is it true that the branches of the Banque Industrielle de Chine were opened in Indo-China on the 16th instant? They were not the branches of the Banque Industrielle but those of the "Societe Francaise de Gerance de la Banque Industrielle de Chine" in Saigon, Haiphong and Hanoi that were opened.

What is the connection between the Banque Industrielle de Chine and the Societe Francaise Gerance?

All the buildings of the Banque Industrielle have been leased by the Societe Francaise de Gerance and the whole staff has been transferred to the said Society, but the Societe Francaise de Gerance is an absolutely independent company, having a capital of its own of F. 15,000,000, and it is to transact all ordinary banking business in its own name. It will also act as agent for the Banque Industrielle to collect the latter's assets in the Far East.

What advantage will this scheme give to the creditors of the Banque Industrielle?

1.—By the medium of the "Societe Francaise de Gerance the collection of the assets of the Banque Industrielle will be made in very favorable conditions.

2.—The salaries of the staff, at present paid by the Banque Industrielle, will be paid entirely by the "Societe Francaise de Gerance."

3.—All the buildings, the commercial organisation, etcetera, of the Banque Industrielle will be utilised instead of being kept entirely unproductive.

4.—All the profits made by the Societe Francaise de Gerance will be handed over to the Banque Industrielle with the exception of a lump sum of F. 300,000, representing the fixed remuneration of the Societe Francaise de Gerance.

INDEPENDENT COMPANY

You have just stated that the Societe Francaise de Gerance will act as an independent company. Do you mean to say that it will not be held responsible for the former liabilities of the Banque Industrielle?

The Societe Francaise de Gerance is a new judicial entity and it will be bound by no other engagements than its own. On the other hand new business that may be transacted by the Societe Francaise de Gerance will under no circumstances bind the Banque Industrielle de Chine. Thus the advantages to the creditors of the Banque Industrielle are seen. If profits are made they will go to the Banque Industrielle and its creditors, while if losses should occur on new business they will be borne by the Societe Francaise alone.

Would it not have been better for the Banque Industrielle to reopen its own doors after having obtained from its own creditors some sort of moratorium?

No. That would not have been possible as the bank is faced with many lawsuits in France, which will take a long time to settle.

From your statements I gather that the Societe Francaise is not going to act as a liquidator but as a kind of guardian?

Yes. You may consider the Societe Francaise de Gerance as a kind of trustee in charge of the business of the Banque Industrielle.

All this sounds very well as far as new business is concerned, but what about the creditors of the Banque?

We have to follow the French legal procedure in that we have to ask our creditors to vote for or against the proposals for the settlement we soon shall submit to them.

What will these proposals be?

We shall offer to all our creditors payment by means of bonds

Harriman Heir Weds Art Student

Mr. & Mrs. Jack Harriman. Int.

JACK Harriman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Harriman, of New York, a prominent family in finance and society, has been secretly married to Miss Alice Laidley, who came to New York to study dancing and art. She met Howard Chandler Christy, noted illustrator, and posed for him, later studying art under him. It was at Christy's studio young Harriman met her. He has been a student at Princeton, but will enter business with his uncle, Frank C. Farley, in Florida. Mrs. Harriman is only twenty, while her husband is one year her junior.

PAVLOWA DUE TO OPEN SEASON HERE NOVEMBER 2

Famous Artist, After Triumphant Tour, Leaves Japan October 30

Madame Pavlowa and her world famous Russian Ballet, who have been delighting throngs of theatergoers in Japan for the past three weeks, will leave for Shanghai October 30 by the steamer Nikko Maru of the N. Y. K., according to word received here yesterday.

The Shanghai engagement of the great Russian dancer will begin at the Olympic Theater on November 2 and announcement is made that the opening program will consist of "Amarillo," "Chopiniana" and "divertissments," including the "Sivan."

Press reports from Japan show that in her tour in that country Mme. Pavlowa and her company have scored an enormous success, at the opening night in Tokio she was tendered an ovation said to have eclipsed any ever offered a foreign artist before, and her season at the capital was a succession of triumphs.

JUDGE LOBINGIER TO REMINISCE AT DINNER MONDAY

Arrangement Completed For Community Affair At French Club

Final arrangements were completed yesterday for the community banquet that is being given at the French Club tomorrow night in honor of Judge Charles S. Lobingier of the United States Court for China by four leading American organisations.

Following the banquet a program of addresses will be given, one of which will be by Judge Lobingier. This is to be "A Retrospection" and it is expected that in it Judge Lobingier will touch upon interesting events of the twenty years he has served as an American federal judge. After the speechmaking the evening will be given over to dancing. Several slight revisions in the program have been made. It is as follows:

"Judge Lobingier's Judicial work in the Far East," Major Arthur Bassett, Former U. S. Dist. Atty.

Judge Lobingier and China," V. G. Lyman, Esq.

"Judge Lobingier and the Community," Dr. F. L. Hawks Pott, President, St. John's University.

"Greetings from the Outports," R. T. Evans, Esq. of the Tientsin Bar.

"A Retrospection" Judge Lobingier.

EMPRESS BOAT BRINGS BIG LIST OF PASSENGERS

281 Disembark Here From Vancouver; Grant Sails Today

An unusually heavy passenger list, including many prominent China residents, was brought to Shanghai yesterday from Vancouver by the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Asia.

The Asia left Vancouver with 1,100 passengers, many of them passengers who were aboard the company's steamer Empress of Australia, which had to put back into Vancouver for repairs after starting for the Orient. The ship brought 281 passengers to Shanghai and a large shipment of mail for the British, American and Chinese post offices.

Among arrivals by the Empress were: Mr. John J. Abbott, Chicago banker who comes to China in the interests of American financiers; Mr. John Johnstone, former taipan here of Jardine's, and Mrs. Johnstone; Mr. R. C. Aitkenhead; of the Shanghai Ice and Cold Storage Co.; Mrs. E. G. Blunt, wife of the Governor of Weihaiwei; Mrs. E. G. Beswick; Capt. E. I. M. Barrett, of the S. M. P.; Mr. E. Gordon Lowder; Mr. and Mrs. H. Lowder; Mr. A. B. Lowson of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank, accompanied by Mrs. and Miss Lowson; Mr. R. H. Davidson, Jardine, Matheson's manager at Chungking, and his family; Mr. A. McAllum, of the Sun Life Assurance Co.; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Quelch, Miss J. G. S. McColl, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Morling, Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Meade, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Rakusen, Mr. and Mrs. G. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. J. Spunt, Mrs. R. S. Stewardson and Mr. F. Senwyzer, of Arnhold Brother & Co.

Among through passengers for Manila and Hongkong were Mr. W. H. Anderson, of W. H. Anderson & Co.; Mr. G. T. M. Edkins, of Butterfield & Swire, and Mr. M. Montague Ede.

Mail for America is to be dispatched on the President Grant of the Admiral Line today. Registered matter closed at the American Post Office at 6 o'clock last evening and ordinary mail may be posted up to 8.30 o'clock this moring.

The liner docked at the China Merchants Lower Wharf and will sail for Seattle at 10.30 o'clock today. Twenty-eight passengers were landed from the Grant and 300 steerage passengers passing through besides the full list of cabin passengers.

The T.K.K. steamer Korea Maru arrives at Woosung from Hongkong early this morning and sails for San Francisco in the evening. The tender with incoming passengers is expected at the Customs jetty about 9.30 o'clock, and the outbound passengers will leave the jetty at 4 p.m.

The next mail from America is due on the President Pierce of the Pacific Mail on Monday. The vessel comes from San Francisco and is to sail for Hongkong and Manila on Tuesday.

"BURDENS REMOVED BUT SWORD IN MY HAND," IS LLOYD GEORGE CHALLENGE

Former Premier Receives Great Acclamations As He Leaves London To Make Speech At Leeds; Prince Of Wales Greets Him

GREAT POLITICAL BATTLE COMING

Independent Liberals Best Equipped Financially For Struggle; Labor Parties Impoverished By Many Recent Strikes

(Reuter's Service)

London, October 20.—Leaving the Guildhall en route for Leeds, Mr. Lloyd George shook hands with the Prince of Wales, who patted him affectionately on the shoulder, and wished him good luck. There were scenes of great enthusiasm at St. Pancras Station on the departure of Mr. Lloyd George's special train to Leeds. He was accompanied by Mrs. Lloyd George, and a hundred Liberal Members of the House of Commons, candidates and friends. Responding to the large crowd's demand for a speech, Mr. Lloyd George thanked the great assemblage for coming to cheer him on in his pilgrimage. "I am a free man. The burden is off my shoulder but my sword is in my hand."

London, Oct. 20.—The election of Mr. Bonar Law as the leader of the Unionists at the meeting on Monday is a foregone conclusion, after which an immediate general election will likely be announced. It was reliably stated tonight that a proclamation summoning a new Parliament will be issued by October 30, nomination day being fixed on November 8 and the polling day November 18. The new Parliament will probably be summoned to meet after a few days interval in consequence of the urgency of Irish legislation and other pressing matters.

London, Oct. 20.—The keynote of Mr. Lloyd George's appeal at the forthcoming election is obviously going to be: "National interests first, against mere party gain." This much is shown in the course of a series of brief addresses from the special train during his triumphal progress to the North.

Remarkable scenes of enthusiasm marked the journey, great crowds flocking from the neighboring districts to the Bedford, Wellingborough, Kettering, Leicester, Nottingham and Sheffield railway stations where brief halts on the way to Leeds were made.

The former Premier in the course of remarks said that he was fighting the same old battle of liberty and fair play. The Tory hotheads had thrown down the gauntlet in the hope of snatching party advantage and he intended to pick it up. Mr. Lloyd George dwelt on the improved conditions which were resulting from united effort when Tory hotheads came and smashed the whole thing in spite of the opposition of their most experienced leaders. He regretted that the unity was broken but "my Conservative friends, Mr. Austen Chamberlain, Lord Balfour, Lord Birkenhead and Sir Robert Horne and myself stand for the country in this great fight for National unity which carried us through the war and will carry us through peace."

Great cheering from the tremendous concourse arose as the former Premier and his wife arrived at Leeds. A party of singers rendered the song "Land of My Fathers." The enthusiasm was overwhelming.

London, Oct. 20.—Never has a political crisis in Britain come to a head with such startling rapidity as yesterday. The end of the political epoch finds all parties eager for the fray. A short life is predicted for any Government formed by Mr. Bonar Law whose health is regarded as unequal to the strain, but it is anticipated in some quarters that he will find difficulty in forming a Ministry in view of the fact that 13 Ministers signed the Unionist manifesto issued yesterday, which was somewhat discounted by today's announcement that Lord Curzon and Lord Derby had undertaken to co-operate with Mr. Bonar Law.

The election when it comes will find the Independent Liberals and Labor members no nearer co-operation than previously.

REGULAR HODGE-PODGE

Sir Donald Mackan, speaking at Innerleithen, summed up the prospect as "a veritable cinema show of parties and groups within parties". He said there would be not merely three-cornered but four-cornered contests.

It was quite possible that the next majority in the House of Commons would represent a minority of electors. He urged the new Government immediately to pass a measure for proportional representation.

With regard to the possible effect on the Irish situation it is significant that Lord Salisbury in a speech at Cirencester said that the Unionists must respect the Treaty so long as the Irish Government properly used its powers under it.

It is noteworthy that Sir James Craig, speaking in the Ulster Parliament welcomed the advent of Mr. Bonar Law as being helpful to the Ulster people.

The Independent Liberals are generally considered to be the

BANKERS PROTEST DUAL NATIONALITY OF CHINESE HERE

Guild Hits At Practise Of Registry In Foreign Consulates

The matter of "dual" citizenship of certain Chinese merchants, a matter which has had considerable attention at the Mixed Court recently, has been taken up by the Chinese Bankers' Guild, which has decided to lodge a protest with the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs.

The question of unwarranted registration of merchants in foreign Consulates was brought up at a meeting held at the Chinese Chamber of Commerce, North Honan Road, last Thursday evening, when the principal members of the Bankers' Guild attended to protest. Mr. Sun Han-chang, as president of the Guild, presided over the meeting.

It was stated that a certain silk dealer had obtained credit from a bank on Peking Road and that when the time for settlement came he claimed foreign protection, notwithstanding the fact that he had always previously claimed to be a native of a district in Chekiang province. As further evidence of this latter fact it was pointed out that Chinese banks will not extend credit to a non-Chinese firm or individual.

The meeting resolved that an official protest be lodged with the Commissioner of Foreign Affairs, he to be asked to take the matter up with the Consulate concerned.

Peace Parleys Set For Next Month

best equipped financially for the fight. Their war chest is estimated to contain £3,000,000 as compared with £1,000,000 in that of the Unionists, while the Labor Party, although abounding in candidates, are impoverished by strikes and unemployment allowances.

TRIUMPH FOR GEORGE

Mr. Lloyd George today goes to Leeds in a kind of triumphal progress. It has been arranged for his train to halt at towns en route so that he may address deputations from the Liberal Associations.

A Conservative meeting has been arranged at the Carlton Club, on October 23, to elect a leader. If Mr. Bonar Law is appointed, it is expected that he will present a list of the Cabinet to the King with the object of carrying on pending the establishment of more stable conditions but the new appointments will necessitate a number of bye-elections which will indicate the feelings of the constituencies.

It is understood that the key-note of his policy will be the strictest economy and a better understanding with the Allies. In the meantime France has agreed to Lord Curzon's request to postpone the Near East Peace Conference until November 13 the venue of which is suggested as Lausanne.

Paris Newspapers Felicitate Mr. Law

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, Oct. 20.—Commenting on the Government changes in Britain, the Intransigeant and the Temps recall that at the declaration of war in 1914 Mr. Bonar Law took up a very clear position in favor of British intervention by the side of France. The Temps heartily wishes success to Mr. Law and expresses confidence in him, continuing: "Confidence is from now on restored in the minds of the French people and will permit the newspapers to discuss in quite a different manner the questions pending between Britain and France." The Journal des Debats states: "The former Conservative leader represents true British tradition, well-balanced intelligence, a profound knowledge of affairs, respect for treaties and friendship to France."

Politicians Busy With Conferences

(Reuter's Service)

London, Oct. 21.—Yesterday was a day of conferences, at which the preliminaries connected with the formation of a Ministry were well-advanced.

Forecasting the new Conservative Government is the popular occupation of the hour. There is a general disposition to assume that Lord Curzon will be the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Stanley Baldwin Chancellor of the Exchequer and Viscount Peel Secretary of State for India, but there is considerable doubt with regard to the Colonial Secretaryship, for which Lord Derby, Lord Selbourne, Mr. L. C. M. S. Amery, Lord Winterton and Mr. William Ormsby-Gore are suggested.

It is believed that Lord Curzon will receive a Dukedom.

All political parties are busily completing arrangements for an election.

It is stated that Mr. Lloyd George has abandoned the idea of a center party and has decided to fight as a Liberal.

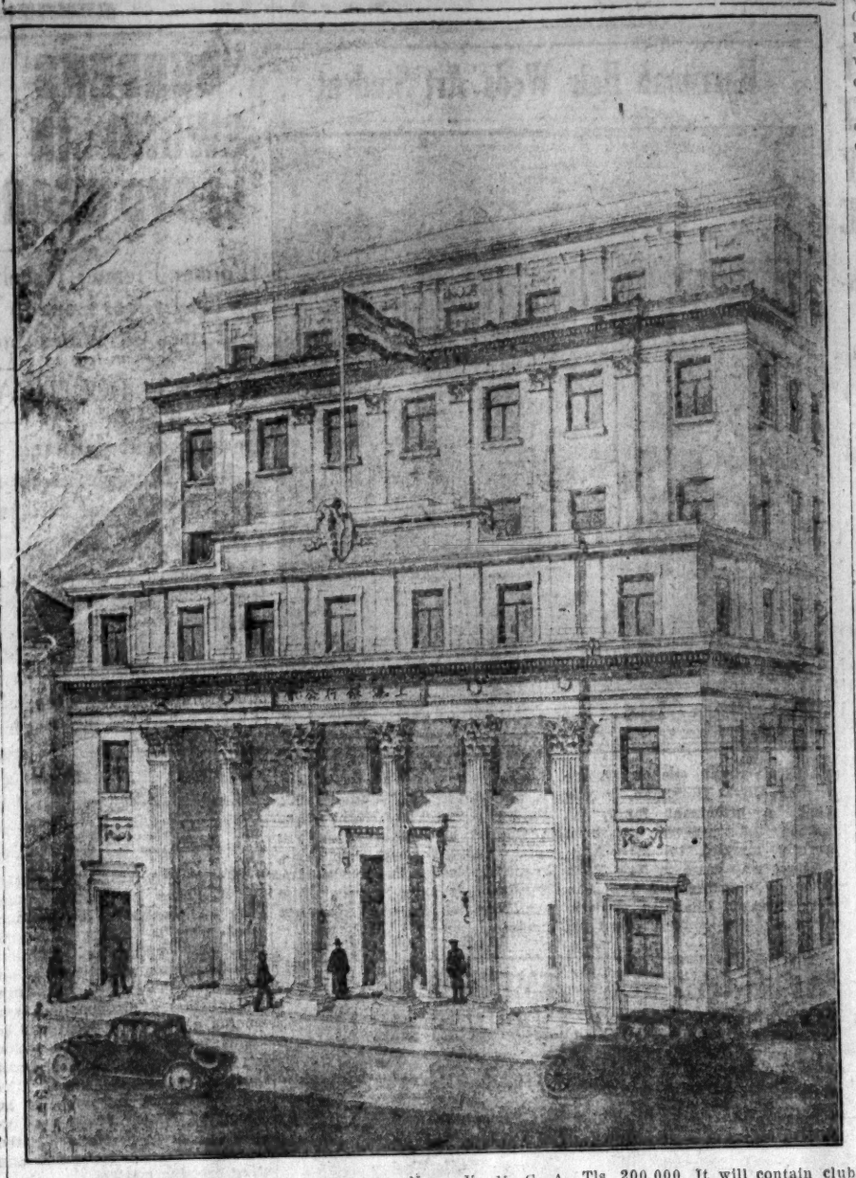
It is expected that a new Parliament will be constituted in time to deal with the Irish Treaty.

French Memorial Unveiled At Bukarest

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, October 20.—A memorial to the French soldiers who fell in action in Rumania was unveiled at Bukarest on Wednesday. The memorial is the work of the Rumanian sculptor, M. Jalea, who lost an arm during the war and is decorated with the French Croix de Guerre. Marshal Foch, General Berthelot, General Weygand, M. Bratiano, the French Minister, and numbers of generals, foreign diplomats and military attaches were present. The Rumanian Minister of War paid a tribute to the French heroes who gave their blood for the common cause. General Berthelot then made a speech. Marshal Foch decorated the sculptor, M. Jalea, with the Legion of Honor. Marshal Foch left Bukarest yesterday amidst the acclamations of the enthusiastic crowds. General Berthelot also left Bukarest to proceed to Jassy, to which town he is to present a French decoration.

New Tls. 200,000 Building Of Chinese Bankers' Association



ABOVE is the architects' drawing of the Shanghai Chinese Bankers' Association's proposed new home, which is to be erected on Hongkong Road, next door to the new Navy Y. M. C. A. building.

The building will be six stories in height and is expected to cost in the neighborhood of Tls. 200,000. It will contain club rooms for the use of the Association members, as well as general offices.

The architects are the Southeastern Engineering and Construction Company.

idea is wrong, for the expeditionary force, in the nature of things, has no administrative functions to discharge in the territory in which it is or was stationed, nor has the field communications department any character beyond that of a machine to deal with the railway authorities of the territory concerned with regard to military transportation.

2.—When the Czech army was leaving Siberia, its commander requested the Japanese expeditionary force to take into its custody the arms and munitions which were to be left behind, whereupon the expeditionary force consented, late in 1920, to assume the responsibility for the time being of keeping an external watch upon those arms and munitions in warehouses and wagons as the Czech command left them. When there arose later a dispute among the parties concerned as to the proprietorship of the munitions, the expeditionary force declined to keep further watch, but because of the necessity of maintaining peace and order it continued to supervise the nineteen wagons containing the Czech arms.

Early in August of this year these wagons were examined at the request of the Czech authorities and were found empty. On investigation it was ascertained that by some crafty process the empty wagons had been substituted. The facts of the case will be made clear in the course of the court martial which is now being held, while the facts concerning the Czech arms will shortly be made known as the result of a trial by court martial. The report that the Japanese military authorities have disposed of the seized arms and that they are guilty of action which runs counter to the policy of the Government is altogether unfounded.

New Bank Company To Be Independent

redeemable in twenty-five years but carrying no interest.

PROVISIONAL AGREEMENT

Is that likely to prove acceptable to your creditors?

Certainly not, but as you probably know a provisional agreement has been signed between the French legation and the Chinese Government, according to which the French Government will offer to all our Far Eastern creditors to exchange their twenty-five year bonds bearing interest at the rate of five percent and redeemable in twenty-two years by means of the French portion of the Boxer Indemnity.

Would it not have been better for the Societe Francaise de Gerance not to open its branches until these bonds have been handed over to the creditors of the Banque Industrielle?

The agreement with the Chinese Government has to be ratified by the French Parliament and the bonds may not arrive in China until five or six months have elapsed. To wait so long would mean new unproductive expenditure and loss of time.

Why has the Societe Francaise opened its branches in Indo-China and not in China?

All the creditors of the Banque Industrielle in Indo-China are foreigners who perfectly understand the position of the Societe Francaise and have requested it immediate opening, whereas most of our creditors in China are Chinese, some of them uneducated people and it might be very difficult to make them understand the legal difference between the Banque Industrielle de Chine and the Societe Francaise de Gerance. Accordingly we might fear that the opening of our doors would be followed by a rush of claimants, and to prevent such a rush we must undertake a kind of propaganda work. I must, however, say that our Chinese friends, particularly the Chinese bankers, have greatly helped us in this matter.

When do you think this propaganda work can be deemed to be sufficient?

Our real efforts have already been sufficient. Consequently I am preparing circular letters to send to all our creditors in China, to foreigners as well as Chinese. These circulars will confirm all I have told you about the Societe Francaise de Gerance, and will make known the date of its opening in China, which will certainly not be much after the 1st of November.

Influenza

BOUND BY LAW

WHEN you take out a life insurance policy you want to know that the insuring company is a safe financial institution. Your policy is a long term contract, the payment of which, in later years, will be of the greatest importance to your family and yourself.

IT is a significant fact to the insuring public that the Asia Life Insurance Company is under the direct supervision of strict American insurance laws, acknowledged to be the most effective in the world in the protection they afford to policyholders. The stability of life insurance companies in the United States and the certainty with which they pay their claims are emphatic proof of the wisdom of such supervision.

THE Asia Life Insurance Company is under the direct control of the Insurance Commissioner of the State of Delaware, U.S.A., whose insurance laws are as rigid as those of any other state. Distance in no way lessens his control, for according to our Delaware charter we are bound by law to satisfy every requirement of that state's Insurance Department as to capital paid in and unimpaired, policyholders' reserve, quality of investments, and numerous other important phases of our business.

WE would welcome an opportunity to explain to you more fully the safe principles on which this company is operated, and the valuable service that we can render to you and your family.

Obituary

MR. E. M. LARCINA

Mr. E. M. Larcina, of the Taylor Garage, who until recently was connected with the Central Garage, died yesterday afternoon at the General Hospital.

The late Mr. Larcina, who was only 31 years old, had many friends in Shanghai, being at one time acting manager of the Palace Hotel. He later joined the Central Garage and resigned some time ago, leaving for Hongkong for a short rest before taking up a position with Mr. Taylor. He arrived back barely four days ago and started at once on his new work. At about 1:30 p.m. on Saturday, while at work, he suddenly lost consciousness, and was immediately taken to the General Hospital, where he expired at 5:30 p.m. He leaves a widow and four children.

The funeral services will be held this afternoon at 5 o'clock, at the Pahsienjao Cemetery.

FAIL TO RECOVER BODY OF ENGINEER DROWNED IN RIVER

Mr. Richard Waugh Loses Life In Collision

An unavailing search was conducted yesterday in an effort to recover the body Mr. Richard Waugh, young engineer employed by the Shanghai Dock and Engineering Company, who was drowned Friday when thrown from one of the company's launches which collided with a Standard Oil launch in the Whangpoo.

Mr. Waugh was riding near the bow of the launch, proceeding to Pootung, when the collision occurred. He disappeared immediately and a systematic search failed to reveal any trace of the body.

Mr. Waugh was 30 years of age and unmarried and had been in Shanghai since April, 1920, in the employ of the Dock Co. He had served his apprenticeship with Messrs. Lobnitz and Company of Renfrew.

Szechuenese Ask Gen. Liu Yu-chiu To Retain Command

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Chengtu, Oct. 20.—The Szechuen Military Conference which is now sitting has invited General Liu Yu-chiu to continue as Commander-in-Chief.

The Conference has decided that military control of the Government must continue, that the distribution of the Salt funds and arms is to be open and fair, and that the appointment of all officials is to be the prerogative of the Civil Governor. It was suggested that the Commander-in-Chief should be concurrently Civil Governor.

Were You Ever as Seasick as This?

Remarkable Results Obtained from "KIRBY'S Sea-Sick Cure."

A prominent physician relates the case of a young man, acutely sea-sick for three days. The third morning he vomited more than a dozen times. After taking the first dose of "KIRBY'S Sea-Sick Cure" he did not vomit again, and was able to eat dinner shortly afterwards. "KIRBY'S Sea-Sick Cure" produces no depression or disagreeable after effects. It's action is almost immediate, it is free from opiates, bromides, chloral and other noxious drugs. It stops and prevents trainsickness, climber's dizziness, aerial and other forms of nausea. Prominent physicians endorse it.

Labor Conference Has Diplomatic, Executive Functions, Says Thomas

(French Wireless through Reuter)

Paris, Oct. 20.—At todays meeting of the International Labor Conference at Geneva the Director of the Labor Office, M. Albert Thomas, explained the main points in his report on the activities of the Office since the last session of the conference.

The Conference has a double character: first, diplomatic by the voting of draft conventions and recommendations, and, secondly, administrative by the examination of the results given by resolutions adopted and by action of the Office. The Report is divided into several parts, of which the first treats of organisation pure and simple.

The Director gives details of the budget which was to be ratified by the last Assembly of the League of Nations and of the construction of the future Palace of Labor, for which the League furnishes the site and various States promise to share the cost. The International Labor Organisation is autonomous in the League of Nations, with which it collaborates in its daily labors to assure the definitive peace, which according to the Treaties can be founded by social justice.

To administer the activities of the Office it is necessary to explain in the first instance the efforts accomplished by the social information services, whose authority is often employed by States as by great employers' and workers' organisations.

NATIONAL LEGISLATION

All national legislation must take into account the experiences undergone by other countries. Besides the industrial problems of every nation necessitate an ever-increasing knowledge of economic questions. Adequate information for employers and workers attains the end of furnishing a basis for conciliation and for avoiding imminent conflicts. Another role is to study the new forces entering into the field of the organisation, which appear in different countries, and new methods, such as that of collective contracts, the part played by which is becoming more and more considerable and its practice can furnish new means for the application of international control.

Documentation of this information immediately evokes international labor legislation. How far does the activity of the Organisation penetrate the economic life of nations. Fifty-four nations at present have joined the Organisation. Two large countries alone remain outside, Russia, whose economic possibilities must not be despised, and the United States, whose entry into the International Organisation must be sought not only because she is a great industrial Power but also because she is a great democratic nation.

Extension of the influence of the International Organisation also signifies dissipation of the prejudices still felt in the adhering countries. Sometimes the aim and the organisation are represented as being too envading. The Conference can judge from the decision of the International Court of Justice on the competence now accepted by us. In various matters the Bureau has reached broad solutions in conciliation.

PROGRESS MADE

The Director then examined the state of the ratification of the convention. Progress had been realised during the past year but the situation presents a problem in the general activity of the organisation. M. Thomas declared that it was impossible to admit that every effort had been accomplished when the Bureau had taken the formal steps provided by the Treaties. Its essential duty was to seek to realise the effective application of the rulings adopted and thus to introduce into industrial activity a rule of right and peace. It was the duty of the Conference to seek means to permit speedier ratification.

The Conference warmly received the news that two conventions had been ratified by Japan.

The discussion of the report of the Director will continue on Monday.

MM. Nolens, Michels and Murdoch have been appointed Presidents of the three Commissions appointed yesterday.

Little Hsu Talks On National Reconstruction At Admiral's Party

(Special To The China Press)

Foochow, October 20.—An elaborate banquet was given last night by Admiral Sah Cheng-ping, Civil Governor of Fukien, at South Park of this city in honor of the victorious military commanders and officers of the naval forces in Fukien waters. Among the guests present were Generals Hsu Shu-tseng, Hsu Chung-chi, Wang Yung-chuan, Li Fu-lin and Huang Tah-wei of the Reconstructive Army.

After dinner, the student body of Fukien expressed its welcome to the guests, who in turn elected General Hsu Shu-tseng as their spokesman. General Hsu gave a lengthy address on the topic of national reconstruction in general and the rehabilitation of Fukien in particular, which was cheered by the students present. An atmosphere of perfect harmony existed between the host and the guests.

FIRE AT BANQUET

Foochow, October 18.—Little damage was done to property when fire broke out today near Nantai and was extinguished by the local authorities. The cause was attributed to the upsetting of a lamp by a certain shop.

Hongkong, October 20.—Realising that his force can no longer be spared for an expedition against Fukien, General Chen Chiung-ming has adopted the suggestion of General Hun Shao-ling and take a defensive attitude towards the Reconstructive Army. The underlining cause of the change of attitude was the unrest on the Kwangsi border.

American School Notes

Mr. Thelander, principal of the American School at Ki Kung Shan, Honan, addressed the S.A.S. student body last Tuesday morning. He spoke on "Service," and emphasised the deeper service that means sacrifice. He also bore greetings from the School in Honan, and expressed the wish that American schools in China could cultivate a more intimate relationship with one another.

Students interested in drawing are hoping to have an opportunity to develop their talents under the direction of Prof. Touche of the French department. A number of students met in Hongkew Park Thursday morning, and engaged in sketching. It is possible that a class in art, which has long been a neglected subject at the School, will be organised by Mr. Touche, and thus permit ambitious students to become proficient in drawing and painting.

The Science Seminar had an interesting program at their initial meeting Friday. New members were welcomed by William Woods. Current events were discussed and the work and progress of scientific leaders illuminated. The president, Henry Skinner, then read his speech on the subject, "Dr. Lee De Forest," commenting on the contributions which he has made to science, and then told of the great future which lies ahead in the field of radio.

The Red Cross organisation and its aims, was the subject of an address delivered by Dr. W. W. Peter Wednesday morning. After relating the manner in which this society, founded for the purpose of benefiting humanity, received its start, he pointed out the many activities in which it has engaged during the past years, the services it has rendered to the wounded and suffering in many nations, and then told of the plans formed for promoting even greater efficiency in the organisation. He also announced that Sir Claude Hill, the representative of the International Committee at Geneva, would pass through Shanghai about November 11, on his way to the first meeting of the Oriental Conference, which is to be held in Bangkok. Americans in Shanghai are expected to answer the roll call after Armistice Day. In previous years the American School has always responded to the call of the Red Cross, and will try to do its part this year in furthering the interests of this great international society, and the school children are hoping that a large percentage of the students will renew their membership.

5 Reasons why PARIS GARTERS are recognized as the standard in men's garters by discriminating and well dressed men throughout the whole world:
1. Being tailored to fit the leg, they are secure and wholly comfortable at all times.
2. Their rubber cushion clasps, an exclusive feature of Paris Garters, hold the hose between rubber and rubber—securely and with no chance to tear even the sheerest silk hose.
3. Their trimmings are rust-proof—cannot be corroded by perspiration.
4. Only the best quality of live elastic—uniformly excellent and rigidly tested for long service—enters into them.
5. Paris Garters are made in every detail to merit and retain their reputation for supremacy in value, comfort and service.

Yak-Tail Trails

as they sat about the Kirei camp fires the night of their hunt. Squatting in a circle around an open outdoor fire of camel fuel they smoked 'the friend's pipe'—first sucked by the chief and then passed to each of the visitors in turn as it went around the squatting circle of the men of the tribe. Smoking 'the pipe of peace' is an old and honorable ceremony among American Indians, and the same significance may very probably be attached to the ceremony in that Kirei tribe in central Asia. The calvacade's members had been adopted as unofficial members of the tribe.

It was while sitting smoking the friend's pipe that the Kirei chieftain told them of Falconry among the Kirei. Happily, in his migrations with his tribe following the grazing ground, the chief had come in contact with the Russians and Russian speaking Kirghiz on the Mongolian - Siberian borderland, and could converse in broken pidgin-Russian.

When the Kirei falconers go out hunting with their winged killers, he said, they always wear a feather from the golden eagle in their caps. For the golden eagle flies highest of all the birds and with its wonderful and powerful wing spread and tremendous talons is a fit match for any animal it is sent against—even the wolves and is therefore tophole joss.

A FALCON HUNT

The Kirei horsemen, in a falcon hunt ride, out from their encampments with the hooded eagle—they are one of the few peoples who use eagles in falconry—hawk or falcon, on a little forked stick on their saddles in the winter. It is only in the winter that they use falconry because with snow on the ground the birds work with success, whereas during the warm weather they very seldom are able to pull down their prey.

The rider gallops over the prairie with his eye scanning the horizon until he spots his prey, whether it be bird, gazelle, antelope or wolf. It makes no difference — except that the eagles are helped by fierce, black dogs when they hunt wolves. The hunted animal naturally runs at first sight, or smell, of the hunters, and the horsemen go galloping after it until they are able to approach a falconing distance on their speedy little Mongolian ponies. As they get close enough they stand in their stirrups, lean forward, unhood the falcon, and then release it. The falcons and hawks quickly mount above their prey and then swoop down on it. The eagles do not rise so high when they pre[illegible] but flutter along in a seemingly awkward manner close to the ground behind it. Within a moment or two, however, they overtake even the swiftest gazelle, plunge into its hind quarters with powerful beak and talons, and cling on until they pull the panic-stricken animal to bay. The hunter, meanwhile, has been riding fast behind on the chase, and as soon as he approaches the downed prey he leaps off his horse and cuts its throat. Falconry is not the most sportsmanlike manner of hunting, but it is undeniably effective.

They sat about the campfire smoking that night listening to tales of hunting over the steppes, sand deserts and mountains until long after the outline of the Batik Mountains to the North had grown shadowy and then faded out in the lowering curtain of night. The next morning they were up with the first grunting camels to take the trail to Barkul—the same trail Ghenghiz Khan and his yak-tail banners trod back in days of dim history.

'The Yak-Tail Trail' grows in interest daily. The next installment, which will appear on Tuesday, continues the adventures of the three Russian students among the Mongols again along the trail that leads to Bar Kul (the lake) and Barkul (the city), the latter the former end of the Bobi caravan route.

Deny Reports Of Seeking Alliance

(French Wireless)

Paris, Oct. 20.—The Lithuanian Legation has issed a formal denial of the report that a Lithuanan military mission, at present in Moscow, is negotiating a military alliance with the Soviets. No Lithuanian mission, military or otherwise, is at present to Moscow and there is no question of negotiations of the kind reported.

Teacher Marries Her Italian Pupil

Alva Richards nee.

ALVA Richards, pretty San Jose (Cal.) high school teacher, twenty-one years old, was denied the company of young men, so what did she do but elope with a handsome young Italian pupil of her night school class, Joseph Caraccio, to whom she was teaching English. The youth earns twenty-five cents an hour at irregular work in a cannery, and his bride, who has not yet reported back at school, earns $225 a month by teaching both day and night classes.

Associated Press Chief Coming Here

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Tokio, Oct. 21.—Mr. Frank Noyes, the President of the Associated Press, was received in audience by the Prince Regent this morning. Mrs. Noyes was presented to the Empress.

Mr. Noyes, who is travelling round the world, was entertained by the Directors of the Kokusai News Agency. Addressing leading newspapermen, he advocated co-operation, looking to utilising the highest ideals of journalism for the promotion of internaitonal amity and education.

Mr. Noyes is leaving for China shortly and from there he will go to India and Europe. He will visit the Associated Press and Allied agency offices to study the news situations.

ARREST STRIKERS AFTER ATTACK ON GOLD SHOP

Twenty-two gold shop workers who were arrested by West Hongkew police Friday night after they had stormed a gold shop located at 233-234 Chekiang Road, were brought up in the Mixed Court yesterday and ordered remanded in custody for one week.

The storming of the shop came as a result of the strike which the employes of the previous metal dealers called some ten days ago. On Friday an arrangement was concluded whereby employes of sixteen of the smaller shops were given a 40 percent raise in wages. The larger shops agreed to a raise of 20 percent but refeused to recognise the workers' union, as a result of which all workers were again called out on strike and the disturbance on Chekiang Road followed.

Rubber Scheme To Mean More Work

(Reuter's Service)

London, Oct. 20.—Mr. William Huntsman, Director of the Bukohakar Rubber Estates in Perak, declares that the new rubber restriction scheme will be complicated and will require an army of new officials. The condition of the rubber market has greatly improved in the last few months and the outlook is promising. He urges waiting a few months longer before taking the proposed action.

New French Note On Reparations

(Reuter's Service)

Paris, Oct. 21.—A French memorandum on the subject of securing reparations from Germany has been handed to the Reparations Commissions, with proposals in favor of the Committee of Guarantees proceeding to Berlin to impose upon the German Government or prohibit certain determinable measures and also measures for the supervision of revenue and expenditure or immediate stopping of the export of capital.

It is proposed that the Committee shall be entitled to all information with regard to German finances. Other proposed measures include strict financial control and placing the Reichsbank under allied control; and that Germany shall continue to levy at least a 25 percent duty on exports, which with the customs and export duties, will be under the supervision of the Committee of Guarantees and may be seized if the Reparation Committee considers that Germany is not fulfilling her obligations.

Why Lights Failed

With reference to the partial interruption of the electricity supply which occurred Thursday evening, the failure did not affect the whole area of supply, but only certain sections.

Electricity is generated at Riverside Power Station at a pressure of 6,600 volts and is transformed up to 22,000 volts for transmission to Fearon Road Station in the Central Area and also to Tonquin Road Supersubstation in the Western area. At both these places the pressure is reduced for re-distribution at 6,300 volts through step down transformers. Thursday evening one of these large transformers developed a defect which made it inoperative, with the reasult that the supply derived from Riverside through this bank of transformer was reduced by some 10,000 K. W. and until certain switching operations could be carried out for transferring the load on to other cables by various routes, it was impossible to maintain a full supply to all the districts supplied by the Department.

It is well known that during the past few years difficulties have arisen from time to time due to the demand for electricity outstripping the means of supply, and the present large extension scheme, which is nearing completion, was designed to meet the requirements of new business for some time to come. Normally there are banks of large transformers installed in large substations such as Fearon Road which are sufficient to take care of the normal demand in the event of one transformer failing, and in the new super-substation which is nearing completion at Fearon Road, provision has been made for such spare transformers. Owing to the conditions obtaining at the old Fearon Road station, however, it has not been possible to instal a full sufficiency of spare transforming plant.

It might be mentioned that when the new super-substation at Fearon Road is fully equipped and in operation, a failure of the supply caused by the breakdown of a transformer would not materially affect consumers.

"I KNEW YOU'D MAKE GOOD!"

Back of every man who goes ahead in business and in life is the abiding, loyal love of some woman.

Sometimes it is a kindly, watchful, hopeful mother who is the inspiration of your desire to attain the kind of success that will make you worthy of her name and her faith.

Sometimes it is a sweetheart, a tender wisp of a girl who believes in you with all her heart, and for whose sake you determine to get somewhere, to be somebody, and to do the things worth while.

But most often of all it is a patient, devoted wife who keeps the priceless spark of ambition burning within you, and for whom you resolve that that dream of a better position and a large salary must some day come true.

Once you feel that vital inspiration to get ahead—once you make up your mind that you are going to earn more money because of what it will mean to your Mother, your Sweetheart or your Wife—you have made a splendid start in the race for Success. But how far you go and what laurels you win depends not alone on courage, or determination, or even upon natural ability, but on training!

Employers everywhere are looking today for trained men. They are seeking them out when they need new men; they are picking them from the ranks for promotion. In every organization, in good times and bad, the trained man is the first to be hired; he is the best paid; he is the man the firm cannot afford to lose.

There is no investment of time and money that pays such large and certain dividends as special training. And the best of it is, there is a simple, easy way for you to get this special training without leaving home, without losing a day or a dollar from your present occupation. You can get it through the International Correspondence Schools, in the odds and ends of spare time that now go to waste.

There is no question, no doubt about this. It has been proved over and over again by more than two million men and women who have enrolled in I. C. S. Courses in the last thirty years. It is being proved by 150,000 men and women who are successfully studying I. C. S. Courses right now. Thousands have risen from humble positions to places of responsibility because they clipped the adjoining coupon.

Just mark and mail this coupon and full particulars about the work of your choice will come to you by return mail.

UNEQUALLED IN CHINA—BAKE-RITE

"FOLLIES" GIRL TO APPEAR WITH FRAWLEY HERE

Have you a former Ziegfeld Follies girl in your company? Most any producer or director might be asked this question. It's almost as common a by-line as "Have you a little fairy in your home?" Most any show considers it quite a "copy" item to have among those present a former Follies girl, whether it be a dramatic stock organization, a traveling musical company or even a vaudeville act.

The Far East Players, Inc., headed by Adele Blood and T. Daniel Frawley, has its own little ex-Ziegfeld girl in the person of Helen Barnes. Mrs. Blood felt that she would like a Follies girl for a member of her company. Helen Barnes, who "wore the gowns," did a little song and a little dance in the Ziegfeld Follies for three successive seasons, was engaged by Miss Blood in New York.

Helen Barnes, whose Follies experience was in 1918, 1919 and 1920, was fortunate enough to be with the late Vernon Castle and Irene Castle in "Watch Your Step." Two other names which mean a lot on Broadway or anywhere else which Miss Barnes mentions when discussing her stage experience are the late Mademoiselle Gaby Deslys and Harry Pilcer. Miss Barnes was with this famous couple in "Stop, Look and Listen."

For a former Follies girl, and everyone knows a Follies girl if she's pretty needs to know little about acting. Helen Barnes has had quite a number of engagements with well known stars, which, after all, means a great deal to a young actress.

Miss Barnes was with the well known William Collier in New York in "Nothing But the Truth" and played with Robert Edeson in "His Brother's Keeper." She was in "O, My Dear," the musical comedy, as a member of the original Broadway cast and played an ingenue role in the farce, "The Squab Farm." More recent things on Broadway in which Miss Barnes has appeared included two popular things of last season, "Ladies' Night" and "The Demi-Virgin," Al H. Woods shows.

"I did enjoy being a Follies girl," says Miss Barnes, "but I much prefer straight comedy or things dramatic. In the Ziegfeld shows everything was all glitter and glare, music and frivolity but in regular plays it's different, you know. It's rather like life I think. If one has all fun and nothing serious to think about one gets in a rut. I had my bouquets, dinners and all the rest when I was in the Follies, but I can now truthfully say that I'm glad I'm doing something more serious."

Miss Barnes is an excellent horse-woman, she likes to golf besides and is fond of dancing. But what ex-Follies girl wouldn't be? Helen Barnes is an interesting combination—a little bit of fluff and a goodly portion of that worth while something which goes to make the altogether versatile actress.

RIVER BOATS BUILDING HERE SOLD TO N. K. K.

Purchase of two steamers now under construction at the Kiangnan Dock to the order of Ten Kokio, local Japanese shipping firm, has been contracted for by the Nisshin Kisen Kaisha. The ships, of 2,000 tons each, are the Goho Maru and Ghoten Maru, intended for Yangtsze River service. They will be completed shortly.

The sellers have incurred heavy loss during the prolonged shipping depression and were at a loss as to now to readjust the business. The firm used to carry on a very active business in the Yangtsze River service, but it lost heavily by a reckless rate war. A severe competition among Chinese, British and Japanese steamers for the past two years spelled ruin to the company and it was forced to close its business partially last month.

The firm now maintains the Ichang-Chungking service in Yokohama only nominally and the business interest will be shortly transferred to the Nisshin Kisen Kaisha.

Community Church Notes

Community Church services today will be held at the Columbia Country Club at 11 a.m. and at the Masonic Temple at 5 p.m. At both services Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, for many years advisor to the Japanese Government at Tokio, will speak. There will be special music and a cordial invitation is extended to all to attend the services.

On Saturday evening, October 28, the young people will give a Hallow E'en Party at the Navy "Y." All young people—from 12 to 86—are invited to enjoy the ghosts and pumpkin pies.

On Monday, October 30, there will be a "Father's and Son's" dinner. This dinner will be held in the Navy "Y" and the charge will be $1 per plate. Fathers are asked to invite their sons to have a good, old-fashioned, home side party. If you have no son you have the privilege of inviting the son of someone who has two or more.

At The Del Monte

Introducing a couple of surprise numbers, the Russian Ballet at the Del Moute scored once more with a capacity house to start on a new week of entertainment last night.

One of the major numbers on the new bill is the "Grand Ballet Barefoot," an ensemble on the classical order. It is the first classical ensemble number offered by the company here and registered heavily with last night's crowd. The musical accompaniment is Chopin, excellently rendered by the Del Monte orchestra.

The "boxing match" provided another surprise for the audience being a novel climax to a pleasing dance number.

Among the various features must be again mentioned the singing of Talia Bochogova. Her rendition of "Geisha" was a particularly bright spot in the program.

Montgomery Ward Sued For Tls. 100 In American Court

There was a long and at times amusing hearing in the United States Commissioner's court yesterday of a claim for Tls. 100.55 brought against Montgomery, Ward and Co. by Mr. Robert L. Stevens, of the Precision Machine Works.

The amount is alleged to be money unpaid for services rendered in installing an electric light plant for Dr. Charles A. Powell in the latter's hospital at Chaohsien, Anhwei. Mr. H. D. Snyder appeared for Mr. Stevens and Col. J. F. Quinn, manager in Shanghai for Montgomery Ward, appeared to defend the case for his company.

Dr. Powell was called to testify and stated that he ordered an electric light plant from the company in 1919. It arrived in bad condition and it took him two years to get the plant, which was not complete when it arrived. It greatly delayed the opening of the hospital, he said. In 1920 he said he got in touch with Mr. Tillson, then manager for Montgomery Ward, and the latter promised to send a man up to install the plant at the company's expense. Up to now a part of the order was not completed. Under cross-examination it was brought out that the plant was worth about G.$1,500. With regard to the sending up of the expert and an assistant, the mechanics were to do other work, for which separate time sheets were to be kept and Montgomery Ward was to be billed. Dr. Powell to pay Montgomery Ward his share of the expenses.

Mr. Dewitt, of the Machine Works made two trips and did very satisfactory work, the witness said. Subsequently he paid Mr. Stevens Tls. 279.80 as his share.

Col. Quinn contended that Montgomery Ward were not obligated to pay for the installation work. It was a gift.

The hearing was finally adjourned for one week.

Obscure Village Shows Precede Film Premieres

Los Angeles, Cal.— The premiere of a film in Los Angeles, providing, of course, it has enough merit to lift it out of the class of so-called program pictures, is always an interesting occasion and, incidentally, a profitable investment for those susceptible to cinematic thrills, for one really gets two shows for the price of one admission—the picture itself and an intimate glimpse of a large section of "Who's who" in motion pictures. Even if the picture should prove unspeakably dull, as quite a percentage of them do, there is good entertainment in watching at such close range the prominent producers, stars and writers from the mysterious regions of the movies.

There are no more enthusiastic film fans in the world than right here in Los Angeles among the picture people themselves. Go into almost any theater in Los Angeles or Hollywood and you will be sure to run into picture people, and quite often, some of the most prominent ones. Many of these writers, directors and stars see practically every picture shown in the different theaters. They sit through the big special productions; they also go to the little cheap theaters. They are interested in the best; they are also interested in the worst. Many of the conscientious ones try to discover in each picture what it is that appeals to the audience, a baffling pursuit for them at times, but the conclusions reached as a result of these movie-hunting expeditions furnishes a working basis for future productions for themselves.

The value of premiere nights in Los Angeles lies in the fact that the exhibitor can invite to the occasion so many widely known picture people, all of whom are always glad to see the new pictures. A favorite method with exhibitors is to send formal invitations to all the prominent producers, directors, stars and writers in Hollywood, reserve seats for them and then advertise widely the names of those who will be present. This is the livest kind of live bait for the public and generally results in mobs of people storming the box office. If the people in these scrambling mobs can get seats—well and good: if not they stand outside the theater, packed tight together, and watch the famous ones come and go.

Picture premieres differ in degree. Some of them are very ornate with special programs of music, and speeches by stars and directors and anyone else who may seem to add luster to the occasion. Everything possible is done to convince the audience that they are taking part in one of the most momentous occasions of the entire history of motion pictures. Between the lights, the music, the speeches, the introductions and the cheers the audience gets itself into an unusually happy and receptive frame of mind and then the lights are dimmed and the picture starts. Other picture premieres take place very quietly but are equally well attended by members of the motion picture colony.

One might think that, with so many professional picture experts in an audience, a Los Angeles verdict on any particular production would be a sort of supreme court ruling for the rest of the world. Not at all. As a matter of fact, a Los Angeles verdict on a picture can be just as unreliable as that of any other city, and there are, no doubt, many who would be glad to go on a witness stand and testify that not only is it unreliable, but worse than any other city's. Los Angeles has picked some very popular successes; it has also picked some "bloomers." Pictures that have been popular here have been flat failures in other equally enlightened places, and many pictures that Los Angeles has refused to thrill over, or even be interested in, for that matter, have been enormously successful in other places. And there you are.

You could fill a Los Angeles theater to the very roof with picture experts, run a film for them, ask them afterward, for a verdict and get so many contradictory opinions that you wouldn't know whether the picture was worth seeing or not. Los Angeles audiences don't agree on pictures any more than audiences do in other cities. Even when one of those special productions comes along that seems to sweep everything in front of it, there is always a vigorous minority in every Los Angeles audience that is willing to go to battle at any time to prove that the picture is one of the biggest frauds ever perpetrated on an audience.

A Los Angeles film audience, however, does know a great deal about the technical side of every picture. They do not go to a theater merely to be entertained by a story in motion. They want to know about the story, naturally, but they are more interested in the details of production. They can spot the weak places in the picture, they can tell you where genuinely good work is done and whether or not the credit should go to director player, writer, cameraman or some of the other studio workers. They can tell you if a picture is well cast and they know that delicate line which separates bad acting from bad directing. Instead of seeing a picture in its entirety they break it up into different parts for analysis and this analysis goes on while the picture is being shown.

Trying out pictures in neighboring towns is growing in popularity with the picture makers in Hollywood, as they realise the value it is to them from a constructive point of view. Often these previews are not announced in advance. The ceremony is simple. Instead of threading up the regular feature, the operator substitutes the new production and the house manager tells the audience that they are about to see the first showing of a new picture. How an audience "takes" the picture means a great deal to a producer who is whipping a production into shape for shipment to New York. If certain scenes fail to register, if what had been considered important titles fail to get over with the audience; if people laugh where they shouldn't and don't laugh where they should; if they stress some situation which up to that time had been of no value from the producer's point of view, these are clear indications that further editing is necessary, and further editing it gets, unless the producer is in a rush to get the picture east to meet release dates.

Occasionally a producer will put a temporary title on a picture he has finished, leave off the cast list, his own name and that of the releasing company, and run it in a dozen or more small town theaters to get the reaction of the different audiences and in this way correct any blemishes that these different audiences may find for him. On these test showings a producer ordinarily takes along with him the members of his crew and as many friends as he can persuade to go and scatters them through an audience with instructions to listen for comments. Afterward these comments are used as a basis for improving the picture. D. W. Griffith, when he was making pictures on the Pacific coast, frequently slipped away from his studio in Hollywood, to show his new pictures, under temporary titles and without his own name on it, to small town audiences, and many helpful suggestions he picked up, too, from these audiences.

The maker of comedies leads all other divisions in preview givings. He, more than all others, is anxious to have people see his picture before it is formally released, because he realises that he and his company have been laughing at their own comedy stuff ever since the picture started and now that it is finished it doesn't seem as funny as it did when they began, added to which is always the dismal suggestion that maybe the thing wasn't really comic in the first place. Well if it is so there's one way to find out quickly—preview it before a disinterested audience. If they like it, laugh at the right times, and otherwise show their approval, well and good; if not, it's back to the studio again with the film and overtime work for the producer, the director, the author, the "gag" and title writers and the laboratory crew.

Fall Planting For Spring Beauty

If the spring garden is to attain full beauty, bulbs must be planted in the autumn. Of these the tulip has long been the acknowledged leader, and every tulip enthusiast can fully appreciate the Dutch craze, "tulipomania," three centuries ago, when over G.$5,000 was paid for a single bulb!

Yet nothing has ever equaled the tulips of today. Fashions come and fashions go, but at present the late dowering Breeder, Cottage, and Darwin types are in particularly high favor. No wonder, either, for they are truly glorious, some of them standing fully 30 inches high.

The stately Darwins, which often run even higher, range through the pastel shades (without yellows) to crimson, purple, and black, showing the wonderful bloom of the grape.

The Breeders, though not quite so tall, generally have larger blossoms and include the rare shades of bronze, purple, dull gold, dark lilac, mauve and blue-black.

The Cottage are shorter (from 16 to 24 inches), have pointed petals, and a lovely range of color in yellows and orange, not found in the other varieties. The three classes provide a marvelous combination of shades, and can be chosen to bloom well through June.

AMONG FANCY TULIPS

Among the fancy tulips are the Bybloem, queerly striped and feathered and showing rose color or violet on a white ground; the Bizarres, striped and feathered on a yellow ground, and the Parrot tulips, unusually feathered and fringed, which before opening are like the neck of a parrot. They can be bought at as low a price as any of the others, and give a touch of novelty.

Tulips do not have to be lifted (as formerly was thought necessary), but can be left in the ground year after year as long as they continue to do well. When they begin to deteriorate they must be taken out, the poor ones rejected, and the good ones set out again.

Tulip beds should be cool. They should have, therefore, only old, thoroughly rotted manure thoroughly mixed through the ground, or—as some growers recommend—bonemeal. Set the bulbs five to six inches deep, five to six inches apart, on a cushion of sand to shed the water, and preferably in the sun.

Daffodils (which in most catalogues include narcissi and jonquils) date back to the days of Greek mythology, and the different varieties are determined by the length of the cup and number of flowers to the stem.

The long trumpet, with a single flower to a stalk, is commonly termed the daffodil. The short trumpet kind, named after the Greek youth, is the popular narcissus. The short cup variety with fragrance and four or five blossoms to a stem, is the jonquil.

PLANTING NARCISSUS

They can all be planted in the hardy border, among shrubbery, naturalised in the grass. They should be set six inches deep and that same distance apart and will multiply rapidly. They like cool quarters.

The crocus, of the bulbs available today, is the earliest to bloom, and can be bought in good mixtures from the big dealers as cheaply as 30 cents a dozen.

In the twelfth century the Persian poet, Sadi, sang his love of the hyacinth.

If thou of fortune be bereft
And in thy store there be but left
Two loaves; sell one, and with thy dole
Buy hyacinths.

The fine single varieties of hyacinths come in all shades. They should be set six inches apart and six inches deep, on little cushions of sand for drainage.

One special satisfaction in growing bulbs is that with the exception of the hyacinth, they can be left in the ground year after year.

Many Russians Still Remain In German Internment Camps

These For Some Reason Have Declined To Take Advantage Of Chances For Repatriation

Geneva, (by mail).—Many people, probably, will be surprised to learn that there are in Germany at the present time several internment camps containing Russians. These internees are former prisoners who refused to return to Russia at the time of the repatriation in 1921, soldiers who formerly belonged to the Baltic White Army, these numbering about 500; soldiers of the Red Guard who passed the frontier of Eastern Russia during the fighting between Soviet Russia and Poland about 840, mostly Cossacks; soldiers of the White armies, known as Wrangel's soldiers, or refugees who followed the German army at the time the occupied territories were evacuated.

Late in 1921 several complaints reached the International Labor Office at Geneva from men in the camps, in consequence of which permission was asked to send a representative of the office to conduct an inquiry into conditions obtaining at the camps. Such permission was accorded, and during the spring of this year, Dr. William Martin went to Germany and interviewed all the competent authorities, beside visiting the camps and talking with the men.

The results of his investigation have now been issued, together with correspondence relating thereto. The report insists upon the fact that all the interned persons are in Germany either by their own desire or by that of the Russian Government, and that they are not held by restraint, as the communications which led to the inquiry might have appeared to indicate.

Germany's legal obligations, with regard to the different categories mentioned above are, however, of varying degrees. She is responsible for the original prisoners of war, since the rules of warfare prohibit repatriation of prisoners of war against their will. On the other hand, Germany is under no international obligation with regard to the soldiers in Wrangel's army, who escaped from Poland and crossed into German territory unarmed, nor is she obliged to maintain on her territory aliens whom she considers undesirable.

The cost of the camps in Germany is difficult to state exactly as, owing to the depreciation of the currency, expenses vary considerably. The average provision for interned persons was calculated in this year's budget on the basis of 9.50 marks a head daily, making a total for 3,500 persons of about 13,000,000 marks a year. The cost of upkeep of the camps, including heating and lighting, amounts to about 3,000,000 marks, and the hospitals also cost about 3,000,000 marks, so that altogether Germany's annual expense for the upkeep of the camps is about 20,000,000 marks.

The report speaks of the sanitary conditions in the camps as generally good. It is in the matter of underwear and clothing that the interned are specially desirous of improvement. The German administration, owing to the cost of these articles, is somewhat parsimonious.

The camp to which preference is given by the interned is that of Wunsdorf, near Zossen, about 50 kilometers (30 miles) from Berlin. The American Y.M.C.A. established a technical school at this camp, at which Russian instructors are training the interned for manual employment and teaching them the German language.

Quite recently, a workshop was founded for typography: numerous newspapers and publications appear in Germany in the Russian language, which creates a considerable demand for Russian typographers in the country. An occupation is thus open for officers, some of whom are educated.

The future of this school, however, is uncertain, as the Y.M.C.A. hesitates to undertake its support much longer on account of the heavy expenses entailed in the payment of instructors and the purchase of raw material.

The German Government is wavering between a policy calling for the total suppression of the Wunsdorf camp and its maintenance as a camp school.

An interesting comment may be extracted from the report on the camp at Cotthus in which surprise is expressed at the small number coming within the categories of undesirable foreigners and those under sentence for expulsion after the expiration of a period of imprisonment.

The German Government, says the report, affirms that no Russian is expelled from Germany and repatriated to Russia against his will. The number of Russian refugees at present in Germany is considerable, amounting to 200,000, or 300,000, of whom over 150,000 are in Berlin.

It is remarkable that, among so large a community of people, so few have come in contact with the police. This raises the suspicion that possibly some are deported to Russia. This, however, the Prussian Government denies, and considers the reason to be simply that the Russians, feeling their lack of political protection, endeavor as a consequence to behave in an orderly manner.

It should be added that in a letter dated June 13, acknowledging Dr. Martin's report, the German Ministry of Labor states that fresh progress has been made in finding employment for the Russians still remaining in camp, so that there were then only about 1,500 persons in the whole of the camps. A further letter of comment dated July 1, corrects the statement that there are at present 150,000 Russians in Berlin, and states that this represents the total number of all aliens in the city.

Is The Great Novelist Extinct?

A question which is asked by readers of the fiction which publishers are issuing today is whether or not the golden age or real literature has passed forever. Is the present comparatively mediocre standard a commentary on the authors themselves, and is the advent of the great epic, be it prose or poetry, simply awaiting the arrival of the genius equal to the task? Among readers, this question may perhaps have become bromidic, but among writers it touches certain cold grim facts in our present civilisation which demand serious consideration.

With few exceptions there are today no professional novelists in America, declares the Christian Science Monitor. Novel-writing as a profession is too precarious a vocation. If a writer has sufficiently mastered the technique of the short story, and has made his market, he is able by this means to tide himself over the months required in the preparation of a novel, so that he may safely take his chances in having his more extended effort eventually yield him a return sufficient to pay at least his living expenses during the period of writing. If, however, he is financially dependent upon the success of his novel, he runs so great a risk of disaster that few can afford the luxury of taking such chances.

In order to write a great story it is essential that the author have sufficient opportunity to study people and environment with much greater analysis than he can possibly employ if a considerable portion of his working time is otherwise mortgaged to some pursuit which is essential to sustain him. The student who has shown promise in music or in art frequently finds some patron who advances a sufficient sum to enable him to devote his time to proper preparation for his great life work, and many instances can be cited, particularly in the musical world, of great artists who would never have been heard of except for such patronage. Can anyone cite a similar case in the literary world? It is admitted that study and practice are essential in art and music, but it seems to be generally supposed that anyone can write. It is true that writing is the easiest form of expression. It is also true that through the medium of the written word one has the power to deliver to the world some pregnant message, but because of the fatal facility with which one writes there is a greater need of study and practice in order that this message, if it be a real message, be given to the world in its best possible form, couched in exactly the proper words, presented with the best technique, and surrounded by adequate environment.

The great novel cannot be written in the midst of present-day conditions. The telephone and the telegraph, the motor cars, the aeroplanes, and all the other great aids to materialistic life are enemies of artistic work during the creative period. Leisure and repose, the hand-maidens of all art, have no place in the hurly-burly of our everyday life, and he who would court the inspiration of their ministrations must be able to separate himself from the commonplace necessity of earning his living, or abandon his ambition to produce a great work. Stories may be written amidst modern surroundings, novels can be produced, poems may be composed, all of which may be acceptable to the readers of today, who are equally affected by the conditions around them. One may take photographs in the crowded market place, but one may not successfully paint there a great picture.

Bank Of England Outgrows Quarters

Just as the pyramids symbolise Egypt civilisation, the column the Greek, the round arch the Roman so the Bank of England, by its history, its legends and traditions and its appearance, symbolises the British Empire, its financial and commercial stability, its grimness and its invulnerability, writes Littlefield in the New York Times The pseudonym, "The Old Lady of Threadneedle Street," has rivaled Scotland Yard for numerical supremacy in the English novel of crime, romance and of fashion, and is quite as well known all over the world.

For a long time "The Old Lady of Threadneedle Street" has felt herself cramped in her ancient garments, and, as it would have been difficult to have her skirts spread out beyond the three and a half acres of ground they now occupy, it has been decided to add to her stature. The elevation contemplated will not spring from the windowless outside walls, the suggestive massive facades, the chief-d'oeuvre of Sir John Soane, but from the interior quadrilateral surrounding the nucleus of the device designed by Sir Robert Taylor and the famous Sampson.

The announcement that the bank is at least to be partly rebuilt, to have six stories added to the inner structure, with a Pathenon portico high up over the ancient portal, is regarded by Londoners as a historic event. However, there is by no means universal approval of the innovation. There is keen but possibly irrational, resentment among the thousands of city workers who daily pass that way. But necessity takes no account of sentiment, and they have no logical alternative to offer.

TEMPLE WAS MODEL

It is unfortunate that Sir John Soane, prophet though he was in many ways, could not contemplate the use of steel in architecture, and hence the drawings he left give no suggestion of rebuilding within the enceinte. Not one among the many indicates a higher building. We learn from them, however, that his model was "the Temple of the Sibyl at Tivoli," of which the southwest angle is a facismile. The entrance to the bullion yard, it is also learned from the same source, is a copy of Constantine's Arch at Rome, although the allegorical figures represent the Thames and the Ganges rivers and are the later work of T. Banks, R. A.

It is apparent, however, in spite of his architectural reminders of the past, that what Sir John and his successors actually set out to do was to protect the bank's board. The original building, we are told by the writer on architecture, Walter G. Bell, was itself quite small, having St. Christopher-le-Stocks church as its immediate neighbor. London was badly policed a century and more ago, and the bank directors were always in nervous alarm lest some desperadoes might use the church as a jumping-off place for an assault on the gold in the vaults.

In the Gordon riots the mob attacked the bank, and human lives were lost in vain effort. St Christopher-le-Stocks, too dangerous a building for purposes of thieves, was then pulled down, and its site was incorporated in the bank; and the encircling wall was, when Soane had finished it, a most effective barricade. But times change, and although mob attacks are no longer feared, every provision has been made to guard against them and also against gangs of cracksmen.

BANK WELL GUARDED

Since the Gordon riots of 1780, a military force has been stationed nightly within the bank, and the the officer on guard is provided with a dinner for himself and two friends. The chief accountant and the chief cashier have official residences within the pile. In addition to the military guard, a certain number of clerks sit up nightly and patrol the building. Outside, both day and night, the most efficient men from Scotland Yard patrol the neighboring streets, while "Bobbies" have been trained to asemble at various points at prearranged signals.

Aside from the bullion and gold coin which the bank was originally designed to guard, and which, now standing at 126½ million pounds, is much below that in the United States Treasury building in Washington, there are other treasuries quite as valuable and apparatus which, if destroyed, could hardly be replaced. In the weighing office are the ingenious instruments invented thirty years ago by a deputy governor of the bank by the name of Cotton, which separates sovereigns of full weight into one box, while those of light weight are passed into another, where they are defaced at the rate of sixty or seventy thousand a day.

The banknote machinery is just as accurate and unerring in numbering and registering each note, so as to secure against fraud in every possible form. There are banknotes in circulation of a value close to 25 million sterling (£24,857,000, the approximate figure), but every note is canceled immediately upon its being paid in. The registration of these canceled notes is so perfect that any note paid into the bank during the last five years can be produced in a minute or two, with information as to the channel through which it found its way back to the bank, although the register contains 77,745,000 notes packed away in 13,400 boxes, and the notes, if placed end to end, would extend over half way around the world at the equator, or a distance of 12,500 miles.

AGENT OF GOVERNMENT

The bank is the agent of the government, on whose behalf it receives the taxes, pays the interest of the national debt in dividends to the half million holders of stock. In return for work done, the bank receives a percentage, together with profit derived from the discounting of mercantile bills with the floating balance of public money left in the bank.

Then, too, there are historic and art treasures. In one of the inner halls are the relics of the guards, whose organisation has been prepared to defend the bank for nearly a century and a half. In another are arranged in a gleaming circle the swords of the old volunteer corps of the bank, first organised when Napoleon was threatening to invade England. Another contains the defenses devised for the protection of the bank during the World War. The most precious art treasure of the bank is the white marble mantelpiece in the courtroom, with its frieze-like sculpturings. It was brought from Italy about two hundred years ago, and first reposed in the house of the Marquess of Angelsey, from whence it was taken to the bank, about 1850.

According to the notes of the new architects, already accepted by the court of directors of the bank, the elevation of the enceinte will cause the demolition of the rotunda, under which so many stirring and romantic scenes have taken place, particularly in the courtroom, where legend says Disraeli had his memorable encounter with the governor of the bank, who had refused to advance the funds necessary to purchase the Suez Canal.

PROTEST IS MADE

Possibly the most severe critic of the new plans is Mr. Bell. He does not bemoan the contemplated loss of the rotunda, but he does seriously object to obliterating the "very beautiful loggia and Prince's street entrance, which are among the finest internal features of the bank." And he adds:

"The wisdom of attempting to reconstruct Taylor's courtroom on another site is questionable. Then, for the unavoidable loss of the guarden court in the present scheme, there is promised compensation in a new garden court in the center of the new mass of buildings. It is very pretty, the old garden court, one of the most restful spots in the city.

"The church yard of St. Christopher-le-Stocks, it was. A bank clerk, one Jenkins was buried there after the building. He stood feet six inches high, and the unusual interment, then in the heart of the bank, was allowed in order to protect the corpse from the greed of body-snatches. A lime tree still flourishes, and it is a sunny place, the buildings all about it carefully proportioned in height to preserve the beauty and amenities of this open space.

"How can any new garden court compare with it, when lying at the bottom of a tall light shaft, with walls towering one hundred feet, perhaps more, above it? Where will the sun struggle in? One will be curious to see those trees suggested in the plan thriving within it.

"The problem confronts the bank directors, and none need envy them their grave responsibility. Perhaps enough has been said to indicate its complexity and there points with which the public will regard themselves as particularly concerned in any alterations at the Bank of England."

CITES EXAMPLES

He then makes an eloquent plea for retaining the bank, citing plenty of examples:

"France, one recalls, maintains the Luxembourg, altered internally to give a chamber for the senate, but the Luxembourg still, the historical monument unimpaired. The Palais Bourbon, sheltering the chamber of deputies, still is the royal palace. The French ministry of justice is housed in a private palace near by the Place de la Concorde, the building left undisturbed. The ministry of the interior at Rome, lodged in a palace, maintains it as a palace still.

"These are historical monuments, zealously preserved; the best possible is done within their limitations, but the fabric must be left unharmed. Such is the policy, and such the sacrifice, of other nations, valuing their artistic treasures. The Bank of England is not a national acquisition in the sense that these are, but it has a very important place in English architecture and a like important place in London City. It cannot be metamorphosed without great loss to both.

Great Britain lags behind many continental countries in the laws they enjoy for the preservative of monuments which, artistically or historically, are of value to the nation.

"At a time when there seemed a possibility of the seat of the papacy being removed from Rome, Signor Crispi was asked what in that case would become of the Vatican. 'The day you go out we step in,' was the reply. The Italian nation would accept the charge. This nation of ours is very chary of accepting anything that involve a charge, hence the wholesale destruction that still goes unchecked which everyone deplores.

ALMOST A MONUMENT

"The destruction of the Bank of England or its spoilation by modern requirements, would alike be deplorable. St. Paul's cathedral would no doubt be a more practical preaching house if the great inner void of its dome were boarded up; Westminster abbey be much better fitted for sightseeing by the large congregations which assemble at coronations and royal marriages if many piers were taken down, steel girders introduced and the choir screen thrust aside. But we do not do these things. The Bank of England of Sir John Soane's creation is almost as much a London monument as the cathedral and abbey."

The world famous institution was projected by William Paterson in 1691 and was incorporated by William and Mary in 1694. In those days Threadneedle Street was called Three Needle Street, a name derived from the three needles in the arms of the Needlemaker's Company, whose establishment was hard by. This Paterson is said to have been everything from a missionary to a pirate and to have learned his banking in Venice, Lombardy and Genoa. At least he was an enterprising promoter, for he got a party of subscribers to lend £1,200,000 at 8 percent and incorporated them as the Governors and Co. of the Bank of England.

"The Old Lady of Threadneedle Street" had many vicissitudes in her early years. Party politics, as well as the wars with the French, served to debase her coinage. And forgers, "sweaters" and "pirate banks" conspired for her undoing. In 1697 she was obliged for a time, to suspend payment until royalty came to her rescue. In 1807 the goldsmiths fearing an invasion by Napoleon, bought up her bills and so shook her credit for a time. In the year of the young Pretender the bank barely escaped a second suspension. Then, in 1780, the great John Wilkes rescued the bank from the Gordon rioters, who had already attacked and burned Newgate.

FORGERIES ONCE NUMEROUS

But the great and besetting anxiety of the bank in the eighteenth century was a forgery. There was "Old Patch," who, making his own ink and paper, cleared up nearly a ¼ million pounds before he was caught and hanged. By the beginning of the last century thirty or forty men had been hanged every year for forgery. At that time a staff of seventy clerks was employed to detect forgeries. Then, finally, there was a cashier who managed to get away with £200,000 about whose exploit Dibdin made a topical song on the name of the chief cashier, whose signature then, as now, was on the notes:

"Sham Abram you may
In any fair way,
But you must not sham Agram
Newland."

The golden age of forgery ended with the magnificent frauds of Fauntleroy and, paradoxical as it may seem, with the abolition of the death penalty for forging, and by the time the American Republic was established the experimental institution of the adventurer Paterson had become part of the fabric of the state and a very important wheel, indeed, in the mechanism of the financial and commercial world.

Before the war visitors were admitted to view the premises, and even the bullion office if in company of a director of the bank. It was then one of the show places of London. But the parties grew from six to twenty-five. The question of guidance was becoming serious when the World War came. Now the bank permits no visitors and attends to business only.

A governor, deputy governor, and twenty-four directors (of whom three retire yearly) have the management of the bank. These meet weekly, on Thursdays, in the room called the bank parlor.

Doctors Disagree On Alcohol As Food

Glasgow, Sept. 12.—There was very lively debating in the section of medical sociology on the subject of alcohol at the session of the British Medical Association.

Prof. Mellanby of Sheffield said that predictions on this question were so strong that it seemed to the average man to be a subject which required no special knowledge in order that he should either strongly favor it as a great blessing to mankind or denounce it as the greatest curse. As affording a foundation for the present discussion it was his duty to describe some of the fundamental facts as to the action of alcohol on the human economy and to supply a summary of the views generally held by those who have made a special study of the pharmacology and therapeutics of alcohol.

Prof. Mellanby said alcohol had to be regarded both as a beverage taken extensively by healthy people and as a medicine taken in sickness.

Our knowledge in both cases was meagre, and he warned his hearers against assuming that the known facts as to its action in health were always sufficient to explain its action in disease. In the sense that a food is that which can supply useful energy to the body alcohol is a food, but inasmuch as alcohol has the property of modifying the function of living matter, it must be classed as a drug. As a drug its most important action is on the nervous system, and this action is also the most easily observed.

Its power of producing drowsiness in one individual and excitation in another, or either of these under different conditions in the same person, had led to the establishment of two schools of thought, one regarding it primarily as a stimulant of the nervous system, the other as a depressant from the first. Modern knowledge, however, showed that the first effect of alcohol was to narcotise or even paralyse the brain which control and regulate all the others, which influence the faculties of judgment and discrimination and control the emotions.

At the same time there was interference with delicate co-ordinated movements, such as setting up type or shooting at a target. The latter effects were produced by quite small doses, apart from the appearance of anything which would ordinarily be described as intoxication.

In fact, to detect these changes accurate scientific experiments were required. At the same time the release of the emotional center from control could cause a certain feeling of lightheartedness, might make ordinary people talk in a clever and interesting way, and render shy people more bold. With larger doses the depressant effect is more obvious.

ALCOHOL DISPELS WORRY

Alcohol must therefore be classed as a narcotic drug, but this does not necessarily place it outside the sphere of usefulness. Alcohol is taken as a beverage in order that one may escape for a time from the strain of existence. Small quantities of alcohol are capable of dispersing temporarily many of the worries and troubles of life, and so may play a part in restoring to better working order various functions of the body whose action is depressed by anxiety. Hence its value in cases of dyspepsia induced by worry.

The evidence in favor of any direct stimulating effect on the heart is not satisfactory, but on the other hand, the experience of the beneficial effect of alcohol in some cases of heart failure is too wide to be passed over lightly. It may be that these effects depend on its interference with excessive inhibition by the higher centers.

Regarded as a food, it is now known that alcohol is almost completely oxidised in the body. The oxidation of one gram of alcohol produces seven calories of heat compared with the four calories produced by the oxidation of one gram either of protein or carbohydrate. It is evident that if this oxidation could be carried out without toxic effects alcohol would supply a large amount of energy to the body, and it has the further advantage that it requires no digestion and is rapidly absorbed.

Prof. Mellanby then described observations made on the administration of alcohol to men and dogs. In both cases surprisingly large quantities of energy were supplied to the organism, but from the point of view of medicine the results were of little interest, as in each case intoxication of a severe degree was produced.

In investigating the treatment of diabetes it had been found that from seven to ten c.cm. could be given per hour without inducing intoxication and resulting in the liberation of thirty calories of heat.

It might be thought from these considerations that alcohol would be of great use in cases of starvation and exhaustion, as, apart from the energy produced, there came from it a sense of comfort and warmth such as came from no other drug. But alcohol has no stimulating effect on the metabolism of the body, and therefore no specific dynamic action such as that possessed by proteins, fats and carbohydrates. It promotes the loss of heat by dilating the cutaneous blood vessels, and therefore should never be given in cases of hardship and exposure unless other forms of food are available at the same time.

LESS EFFECT ON FAT MEN

Prof. Mellanby then referred to Stockard's experiments on the effect of alcohol on the germ cells of animals. He thought it was proved that alcohol in extreme concentration could influence the germ cells to an extent that damaged succeeding generations, but was doubtful if such conditions could occur in man except in very exceptional cases.

Discussing the phenomena of drunkenness, he said that bulk, especially in the form of adipose tissue, postponed drunkenness, as it took longer in the large, fat individual to attain the necessary alcoholic concentration in the blood. Food had a marked influence on the absorption of alcohol and milk fat especially tended to prevent it. The interval between drinks was of great importance, as if sufficient time were given for the voidation of one dose before another were taken drunkenness would not result.

It was not possible to establish a tolerance to alcohol comparable to that which could be developed in the case of morphine and other drugs, and his experiments showed that the alleged tolerance established by some individuals was much exaggerated.

Dr. McCurdy, of Cornell University, discussed the effect of Prohibition from the point of view of a specialist in mental diseases. He gave reasons for his belief that it was impossible to draw conclusions of permanent value from conditions obtaining in America today, and indicated some of the lines along which the present situation might possibly develop. In his view alcoholism was largely secondary to other mental defects. "The ravages laid at the door of alcohol," he said, "are those attributable to other factors as well. In general terms one can formulate the role of this poison saying that it liberates abnormal reactions that have been latent, and at the same time increases whatever fundamental tendency to abnormality there may be."

He argued that the normal individual is one who has the power of adaptation to social circumstances; his individualistic strivings are repressed to the unconscious. If we are adaptable we can give some outlet to these strivings in permissible forms; if we fail in adaptation they tend to emerge in less permissable forms. In other words, if we are happy and successful our unconscious minds are placated, but if we are unhappy and unsuccessful we are at once apt to become anti-social.

Adaptation means contact with reality. When this is difficult to maintain we yearn to abolish realty or blot it from sight. Any drug which stupefies will do this. Hence the man who wants to forget the world drinks. He gains the desired release. If this were all, alcohol might be an unmixed blessing in an emergency, but unfortunately this release is purchased by impairing those very faculties that are needed to attain success; anti-social tendencies are liberated at the same time, and these increase the maladaption. The alcoholic drinks to forget and thereby increases that which he would forget.

HEALTH FROM ALCOHOL

With normal people reason triumphs over impulse, and they imbibe in moderation. The alcoholic before he ever touches a drop is an abnormal person. Conviviality is more important for the maintenance of our mental stability and effectiveness than we realise, as is witnessed by the fate of those who utterly lack that capacity. Innumerable people, on the other hand, are made happier, and therefore healthier, by moderate indulgence in alcohol.

On the question of Prohibition Dr. McCurdy said he was neither an antagonist nor a propagandist, but an agnostic trying to consider factors often neglected in the discussion of the problem.

Sir Frederick Mott, F. R. S., agreed that the action of alcohol on the nervous system was essentially sedative, affecting the higher centers first and the lower centers afterward. Tolerance to a great extent could be acquired by the habitual drunkard, but it was established at the cost of the protective mechanism, for it enabled the drunkard to imbibe quantities which he could not have done had his brain retained its normal power of reacting. Thus he became a chronic inebriate, and sooner or later developed pathological symptoms.

His experience taught him that asylum statistics bearing on this question were not reliable, as in a large number of cases the alcoholism is secondary to the insanity. He therefore agreed with Dr. Sullivan and Dr. Bevan Lewis that alcohol as an efficient cause of insanity is not so great as the published reports of the Lunacy Commissioners indicate. It was the sedative power and not any stimulating effect that made the rum ration of value in the emergencies of military service, and he had found that of 147 cases of "shell shock" or other war neuroses admitted in 1917 to the London Hospital, 60 percent were total abstainers.

ACCIDENTS AFTER PAY DAY

Discussing the effect of alcohol on industrial efficiency, Prof. Collis of the Welsh National School of Medicine, held that alcohol interfered with the reflexes and impaired the co-ordination of movement. The effect of this was seen in an increase of industrial accidents when drinking was prevalent. He quoted figures showing that there was generally an increase of accidents on the days following pay day, and with Prohibition in America there had been a fall in the number of fatal accidents from an average of over 1,600 to 1,238 in 1919. Further evidence came from several large employers in America who were satisfied that they received better and more efficient service since Prohibition had been in force. The effect of alcohol could also be traced in the increased loss of time following pay days.

He concluded that while alcohol possesses a charm for removing the irritating effects of industrial fatigue, it is a charm purchased at a great cost to efficiency. The experience of America convinced him that the time is not far distant when in the interests of efficiency we may be compelled, if our habits are not brought within temperate limits, to follow the example of America.

ADVICE TO BRITAIN

Dr. Hindhede, of Copenhagen, gave a statistical review of the alcohol consumption and mortality in different countries. He believed that if France would adopt the Danish system of rationing 300,000 lives would be saved annually and the population problem of France would be solved. He advised the British people to stop the production and consumption of alcohol for two years. If no effect were produced they could return to their drinking habits, but he anticipated that there would be a saving of from 50,000 to 100,000 lives.

A paper read on behalf of Prof. Stockard of Cornell University Medical College, recorded that his experiments—he has carried out a long series through the medium of certain species of eggs and of guinea pigs—gave no certain proof that alcohol had ever caused abnormal development in the human embryo. Neither did they prove that it might not, except in so far as the doses necessary to induce an effect were greater than they had reason to believe ever existed in the human body.

Discussing Professor Mellanby's paper Professor Cushny said that while it must be admitted that alcohol was a food its food value was often exaggerated. The actual amount of nourishment contained in a pint of beer was roughly equivalent to that contained in an ordinary cup of tea or coffee containing milk and sugar. Nobody regarded the breakfast cup of tea seriously as a source of nourishment, and in any case alcohol was not a desirable form of food.

The Rev. Courtenay Weeks, M. R. C. S., said alcohol was the most disastrous factor in modern social life. During the war he had served under fourteen specialists and in no case had alcohol been ordered as a medicine for sick or wounded soldiers. The statistics of convictions for drunkenness had proved the value of the restriction introduced by the Liquor Control Board. Alcohol was costly to produce, costly to purchase and of untold costliness in its effect upon the individual.

Another speaker quoted Attwater's saying that, if alcohol were compared with coal, it was a fuel which could not be put into the furnace without pouring it over the machinery.

DISLIKES "PIOUS OPINIONS"

Prof. Dixon of Cambridge thought that no good could come of a discussion in which the reasoned deductions of a scientist, such as Prof. Mellanby, were met by pious opinions expressed by Mr. Courtenay Weekes and others who were uninfluenced by ascertained facts. Prof. Rivers, he said, had proved that work was actually increased by the administration of alcohol in certain doses.

Sir James Barr of Liverpool said that a great deal of the present social unrest in the country was caused by the high price and difficulty of obtaining beer. Most of the cut-throats in Russia and Ireland were tee-totallers.

Following Sir Frederick Mott's paper on "Alcohol and Insanity," Dr. Sutherland agreed that alcohol was a negligible factor in the production of insanity. During the war statistics regarding male lunatics were unreliable, but his statistics showed that among women, while there was a decrease in convictions for drunkenness, there was actually a slight increase in admissions to asylums. On the other hand, alcohol was undoubtedly responsible for grave anti-social conduct, especially for suicides and crimes of violence and lust. He believed that alcoholism was principally due to bad environmental and especially to bad industrial conditions.

Dealing with the question of industrial efficiency, Sir Thomas Oliver quoted figures showing that in certain cases abstemious men had been able to average over 70 hours per week against an average of less than 40 in the case of men of alcoholic habits. He believed that alcohol lowered the output of work and deteriorated the standard of quality.

As regarded efficiency, Dr. Wynne, of Sheffield, said most people would admit that a certain quantity of alcohol could be taken without loss of efficiency, but as the amount was increased efficiency was impaired and finally destroyed. Prohibition did nothing to reinforce the infirm will, and the man who only refrained from getting drunk because he could not obtain drink remained a potential drunkard. He believed the remedy for drunkenness would be found in licensing the drinker as well as the vender of alcohol.

The Rev. E. Tonge, of Canterbury, claimed that licensing statistics bore out the relation between alcohol and inefficiency, and that a curtailment of opportunities for drinking was followed by a decrease in drunkenness.

A resolution was passed requesting the Council of the Association to assist in the promotion of further inquiry into the effect of alcohol taken as a beverage on the individual and on the community.

The International Institute

The following report was presented by Dr. Gilbert Reid last Wednesday at the fiftieth semi-annual meeting of the International Institute.

The present report is one of progress, but our goal has not yet been reached. We hope to be nearer the goal in our next report, half a year hence. We have reason to take courage and go ahead, in spite of all the pronostications of unfriendly critics. "A great and effectual door is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries;" and strange to say, these "adversaries" are mostly not from "the heathen," but from "the fold."

WORK IN PEKING

First I took up the work with its signs of hope, encouragement and progress, in Peking.

During the half year, the director has given 57 addresses, just the same number as in the previous half year. These addresses have been of two kinds, both as to theme and audience. The one kind was a continuance of the course of lectures, mentioned in the previous report, and aiming at stirring up the Chinese to patriotism, reform, peace and unification. The provincial authorities of two provinces invited me to give my course under their patronage to the student, mercantile, official and religious groups. The two cities visited were Anking and Hangchow. Provision was made for my entertainment as well as for the meetings. Hundreds of Chinese were reached thereby. I am grateful to all who helped. I also gave a few addresses of the same character in Shanghai and Peking.

The second kind of meetings was more of the distinctively religious nature. During the Summer months while most of the missionaries were on vacation I preached in thirteen of the churches in Peking, at the kind invitation of the Chinese in charge. Two were Presbyterian, two Congregational, four Methodist, one London Mission and four independent Chinese churches. I was thus a kind of circuit rider.'" This simple statement may suffice to answer those who have been wont to give the exhortation that I give up the Institute and devote myself exclusively to preaching. It will probably be found that with all my Institute work I have done as much preaching as many of my missionary critics. I never decline an invitation to preach, and of course in China with no remuneration. There is no previous stipulation as to salary. The service rendered is with no money consideration.

Beside these addresses to Christian audiences, I have had the rare privilege and pleasure of addressing gatherings of religious devotees and moral reformers who are "not of this fold." Three of these meetings were of representatives of all the great Religions—Christianity, Confucianism, Buddhism, Taoism and Mohammedanism—in Peking. These like my course of lectures in the provinces, centered on the national well-being of China. One of these meetings was held in the Central Park and the other in the Chen Kuang theater, without any charge to the Institute. The last meeting passed a resolution in favor of "No more war" in China, and a copy of the resolution is being sent to the high officials all over China. It was moved by a general who is also a pacificator—Wang Chih-hsiang, was seconded by a Mohammedan Mollah over 80 years of age, and was supported by adherents of the different faiths in five and ten minute speeches.

Equally interesting has been my close contact with a new movement called the Tao Yuan, which may be translated as the Hall of Truth." Delegates from some eight provinces assembled in Tsinan to organise the Hung Wan Tsze Hui, which may be translated as the "Red Sauvastika Society," much after the character of the Red Cross Society. All the men are men of standing, formerly in official life, but seeking for peace and satisfaction in religious devotion and activity. I was invited to be present, the only foreigner among some 90 delegates. I was entertained by the organisation, had my travelling expenses met, received $200 for the Institute and was set apart to be the honorary president of the new society for giving relief and showing compassion to the needy ones in China.

More than in past years has the work of the Institute been directed to this other branch of the higher classes. Originally our thought was of the mandarins and literati. Then came in the new student class and the mercantile class. And now, with even greater opportunity, there opens up this great body of men in China who are religiously disposed, are fearing God and working righteousness—men, and women, too, whose influence is great in the moral and spiritual sphere. I believe in the sympathetic approach and in utilising their influence, far greater than my own, as the influence of the official and educated and business classes, for the good of the whole country. "Into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy, and there abide." My personal opinion, in no wise binding on any other, is that the good in all religions should be recognised and appreciated as coming from the one Source of all good, that the similarities should be emphasised rather than the differences, and that in respect to differences, even when others are in the wrong, it is better to try the positive method of proclaiming the simple truth and living the proper life, than to use the negative method of attack, destroying and so creating antagonisms.

The work of the Institute has developed in another direction also. Ten of my former students, holding positions in Peking, united with me in addressing a letter to some twenty-five men of prominence with the request that they become the promoters to two schemes, one the re-establishment of the Institute in Peking, and the other co-operation in starting a weekly paper in Chinese (and later in English) to be called the International Journal. There has been a hearty response, but the full list must be left over to the next report. Among the number, besides the present Premier there are four ex-Premiers. All the religions are also represented. We make no distinction of political party or religious creed. For the Institute scheme land and buildings are needed, but before all this is accomplished, the plan is to secure moral and financial support for the new journal, which we hope to set agoing in about a month on constructive, helpful, conciliatory, and morally uplifting lines. At present writing the active editorial staff, to be paid, consists of two foreigners and three Chinese. Besides these, we have an honorary editorial council, not to be paid, of six foreigners conspicuous for scholarship, and six Chinese noted for literary accomplishment. The list is not yet completed. Besides the money that I myself am venturing, on pure faith, to put into the scheme, I expect many Chinese—and perhaps, some rich foreigners—will make much-needed contributions. It is a venture of faith, out of sincere interest in China's well-being, her re-unification and her reconstruction.

Needless to say, all these forms of work have brought me into contact with many Chinese. Politically China is weaker than ever, but if the inherent goodness of multitudes of the Chinese can be tapped, or even appealed to, day in and day out, and the interference, exploitation and bad advice of outside nations can be kept at a distance, there is still hope for China, for democracy in China, and just as much for "pure and undefiled religion."

WORK IN SHANGHAI

During the last half year, as during the past five years, the work of the Institute in Shanghai has been in the hands of Chinese, three of them. One of the number who for some ten years has had charge of the Chinese exhibit and has been most faithful, is dangerously ill. A second has had charge of the Institute Record (monthly) which is now to be incorporated in the International Journal. A third has been the business agent of the corporation. Monthly meetings of all religions have been held with more or less of success. While the new spirit in China favors the idea of Chinese control in all enterprises, the recognition of this fact and partial compliance therewith have produced no great results or secured for our Shanghai work any enthusiastic support. Hearty co-operation between Chinese and and foreigners is really the better policy and on this basis the Institute is in fact constructed. The failure of achievement in Shanghai must be traced to other causes, the chief of which is the havoc wrought in men's thinking and personal friendships by the Great War.

While in Shanghai in May I was "visiting delegate" to the National Christian Conference and was privileged to speak for five minutes.

THE HOME END

The Executive Committee in New York, especially through the honorary secretary and treasurer, has put forth effort in our behalf, but no report of the results has yet eached us. We fear that the financial conditions in America during the summer have not been favorable to any campaign of money raising. None the less, we greatly appreciate the kindly interest which has been taken by our American friends in the home land.

Our two books, "China, Captive or Free?" and "A Christian's Appreciation of Other Faiths" have almost universally been reviewed with favor, and in some cases with high praise. The books have been circulated not only in the States, but abroad.

Owing to heavy pressure of work, we have been unable to write as many articles for the home press as we have wished. Our son, the secretary of the Corporation, has been doing part of the time, newspaper work in Peking and prosecuting other form of literary effort.

SOME CRITICISMS

A great deal of the advice received, generally from those who have no part in the management of the Institute, is either that the International Institute might as well cease to be, not only in Shanghai but anywhere in China, and the property handed over to them for other uses, or that the founder and the director-in-chief for twenty-eight years, being an "undesirable character" and having opposed China's entry into the horrors and perils of the World War, should for his folly and audacity retire into private life. As for the first desideratum, I am glad to say there are those in Peking and in other parts of China, who see for the Institute its worth and scope and opportunity for continued usefulness. As to the second desideratum, the director-in-chief, having toiled all these years, is not inclined to step aside, providence permitting, until the new superstructure is well completed and some other person is both willing and determined to carry on the work in the face of all obstacles. The experience of the last months has encouraged the director to think that his days of usefulness in China are not yet over, and that in fact he has more and truer friends among the Chinese than in former years. He sees no reason to follow just yet the behests of those who are not concerned and who excell only by their judgment of others. The cultivation of friendship between the Chinese and the nationals of other countries remains one of the objects of the Institute, but what the Institute has done or is doing in this line is only a small part of the common task of all. International friendship is not a one-sided affair; there must be warm, reciprocal action, a real brotherhood in spirit and also in demeanor.

IN MEMORIAM

A former teacher for a while in the classes of the Institute, the Rev. Samuel Couling, has passed away, mourned by many. The help which he gave the Institute in years gone by will never be forgotten, and his personal character will be held in reverence.

Our old Chinese friend, president of the China Advisory Council, Dr. Wu Ting-fang, suddenly away during the military upheaval in Canton. He lived to a good old age, but he had hoped to have lived much longer. He remained to the end a loyal advocate of constitutional and democratic government in China. He died in certain respects a martyr to the cause. In former years we were associated together in a very friendly way, and so personally the loss is great. As for the Institute he from the start, while he was still Minister in Washington the first time, showed deep interest in the carrying out of its plans, and many were the times when he took part in our business meetings and lectured to our audiences. The Institute joins with many other organisations and numerous individuals in revering his memory and in hoping that his influence for good may rest over China even from out the spirit world.

ANNIVERSARIES

This Autumn there comes in our little circle several anniversaries. I have my sixty-fifth birthday; it is forty years since I came to China, and thirty years since my wife came, and we two are celebrating our twenty-fifth wedding day. This year is also the twenty-fifth since the Chinese Foreign Office, then consisting of two Princes of the realm and Nine Ministers of State, first formally issued a red sealed document sanctioning the plan of the International Institute of China. Whether the Chinese will celebrate any of these events is uncertain. Five years ago when they celebrated my sixtieth birthday, they were rebuked and warned by the Ministers Plenipotentiary of eight foreign Governments; so they had better go slow. Still the world is growing better—is it not—and the spirit of love again reigns in Christendom—does it not.

It's the same old place, the same old number, but... ..... see how different it looks!

NERVE STORMS.

Lightning is not more erratic than the person who suffers from nerve-storms. Though the victim is often accused of being "bad-tempered," the trouble is really one of health. Bad days usually begin with irritation on rising. Some little upset arouses a cantankerous mood, and once the balance topples all control is lost.

Nerve-storms are dangerous; the wear and tear on the nervous system is highly exhausting and debilitating to the digestion and heart; it causes also congestion in the liver and brain; and, indeed, collapse sometimes follows.

Make no mistake—nerve-storms indicate a nervous-dyspeptic state. When the digestion is perfect, the appetite is good, and food eaten keeps the nerves and blood well fed. Then such good health pervades the system that nervous disturbances are rare.

Weak, irritable, nervous victims of indigestion should tone up their nerves and strengthen their digestion with new blood. To make this new blood it is necessary to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, for these pills create new blood that makes you feel fit from tip to toe. You will be delighted with the keen appetite, energy and radiant good health that follows.

Chemists everywhere sell Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, or direct from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., 96 Szechuen Road, Shanghai, $1.50 for one bottle, $8 for six bottles, post free.

Too Many College Men?

IT is a curious turn of fate that the college of which Daniel Webster said. "It is a small college, but there are those who love it," should now be advertised by its able President as being loved by too many. Several thousand applicants for admission have been refused; but the implication of President Hopkins's bald statement that "too many men are going to college" is that there are still too many students admitted, not only to Dartmouth but to colleges and universities generally.

It was not long ago that college and university Presidents were going up and down the country trying to interest young men and young women in higher education. Like Wisdom in the Proverbs, they cried in every public place. But they have seemingly been too successful. Not only have they persuaded more to apply than can possibly be accommodated; they have induced many to come who, though they may pass the college entrance examinations and have all the necessary "counts," are not "educable," according to President Hopkins's definition; that is, are not capable of "following the logic of their carefully considered thought through to conviction." This is a pretty severe test even for such men as the youth have before them in public life today and who may well exclaim: "If thought shouldst mark our intellectual iniquities, who shall stand."

As a result of the draft tests about 4½ percent of those examined were estimated to have "the ability to make a superior record in college," and about an additional 9 percent were deemed "capable of an average record in college." If these percentages were extended to all youth and young men from 17 to 23 years of age, the number in the first class would be roughly 250,000 and in the second class 500,000. The total might even reach a million, from whom to recruit the army of those deemed capable under such tests of enduring with benefit the mental discipline of a college course.

But there were in all the colleges, universities and professional schools in the United States last year less than a quarter of a million of men students (229,841, World Almanac), which is about the number of young men in the class of superior educability, besides two or three times that number who are not below the second class. If these estimates are even approximately correct, it is deducible that there are enough "highly educable" young men to fill the colleges and enough "passably educable" young men to fill them again two or three times over.

It can hardly be, then, that for many educable men are going to college, unless indeed all college educable men should not go where college education can be had most economically and helpfully. It is that too many non-educable men go to college, hoping to have benefit from association with the educated or the educable, or, as President Hopkins suggests, too often seeking membership in a social organisation which has reputation for affording an education and hoping to have benefit from the association if they can avoid being detached from it.

Despite the fact that the academic admission requirements have been raised, there are doubtless, relatively, more non-educable men in college now than a generation ago, because of the alluring social and economic advantages of a college association which did not then exist. It is no longer the "lads o' pairts" only who go up to the universities. The serious problem is to discern with the divination of an "Auld Domsie" who these lads are and then to see that they have an education. This is the divination which College Entrance Boards' and Regents' examinations have been trying with increasing devotion and ingenuity for years to make. But these disinterested agencies, these prophets with the anointing oil, should be given every approved means for this determination of the fitness of candidates. It is a sacred public office whose importance cannot be too highly valued in a democracy that wishes to make best use of its brains. Eliab, despite his stature, which makes him seem very desirable as football material, would better perhaps, after all, be a miner, or Shammah, who on account of his "outward appearance" has social aspirations, would be more useful as a merchant; or there's a lad of "ruddy" face in the fields upon whom the spirit of learning ought to come mightily. All the candidates should be made to "pass before" such prophets.

There can never be too many men going to college, if those who do go are "educable" and if the college really educates them when they go and does not lead them away from really productive work, out of sympathy with their families and with those who with their hands "support the fabric of the world." It will be a happier human society when every man can have all the intellectual opportunity that his mental equipment allows him to avail of, while at the same time making his contribution to the physical upkeep of the earth.

There cannot be too many men going to college if those who, passing the academic and psychological and personal examinations, crave "the mental abilities and qualities of soul to know the truth;" and if, moreover, they are encouraged and assisted to do that which a man sitting on the highest bench in the United States has just quit his high place in order to do—get acquainted with his soul before it has to leave its body.

Living Wage Philosophy Told

BY WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

It is easy for the statistician of the railroad owners to prove that there is no such thing as a living wage; to show that there would be a living wage for one man or family would be poverty or luxury for another. But the fact remains that wages must be sent in reference to the cost of living. Labor otherwise becomes a commodity, and unless certain standards of living are predicated in any wage dispute, we shall get our labor down to a point where certain standards of citizenship also are forgotten. In spite of all we may say, economic status does affect intelligence and morals. And if we are to force labor down in a competitive market to a standard lower than the American average, we shall also force our Nation's ideals down to a low standard.

It is begging the question to declare that a man with five children should have a living wage lower than a man with ten children. It is cheap to point out the fact that a man whose family is practically self-supporting must have a different living wage from the man with a houseful of little ones. For all that is beside the point. When an average man's family income is ascertained, he should have enough every Saturday night to live decently in self respect and educate his children. If he has no children that is his loss, and if he has more than the average number of children that is his gain. And the average man's wage should not be changed because of the exceptional man's advantage or disadvantage.

The labor market must go. Labor is not a commodity. The laborer is a citizen. And to function as a citizen the worker must have self respect. He cannot have self respect if he is a chattel on the block in a competitive market His country must protect him against the greed which would make the laborer but one grade higher than the slave.

When a living wage is established for the unskilled, then let every man's skill and intelligence have free play and let him sell these in the best market and for his own advancement. That is the philosophy of the living wage.

NATURAL SELECTION

The report of the prohibition commissioner of an increasing number of deaths this fiscal year from bad liquor is cheering. Sooner than might be expected the fellows who persist in patronising the bootlegger will be killed off and law enforcement will be that much asier. Also the larger the risk, the smaller the number that will take the risk, and again the easier it will be to enforce prohibition in those circles where they still think the law is an infringement upon their "personal liberty." The worse the booze, the easier it will be to stop its illegal sale. The law of natural selection will work in this matter with pleasant efficiency. The punishment will fit the crime, if the man who buys booze in violation of the law, dies by it. Thus do "all things work together for the good of them that love the Lord."

The prohibitionists are supposed to be a sour-faced, long-nosed, gloomy lot. But they can chuckle with glee at the prospect of bad booze assisting in the enforcement of the law.

SABOTAGE OF CIVILISATION

How long will our civilisation continue to digest the monkey wrenches that we are daily heaving into its works? Labor is throwing in ill-timed strikes, capital is making a vicious fight to "liquidate" labor and destroy its unions. Trainmen are violating their contracts and hanging trains up in the desert. Railroad executives are sending out all the crippled engines and defective cars that will escape the vigilance of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Coal miners are slacking production, and coal dealers are shamelessly profiteering trying to make the public pay for the losses during the strike. Working men are defying the Labor Board and capitalists are defying the coal rationing orders. The Senate is trying to pass a tariff bill full of legalised special privilege, and the House is checking up to the President a bonus bill full of financial dynamite.

Everywhere selfishness and greed are saboting civilisation. The world is full of Lenins and Trotzkys who are trying to set up their own little kingdoms of oppression in the name of the common good. And yet the old machine runs along, creaking a little, rattling more or less, but still delivering the goods. What a lot of bunco there is in the goodness and decency of the ordinary everyday man who wants, in the main, to do right, and has faith in the honesty of his fellows. He and his family are keeping the world running as a going concern.

THE WOMEN NOVELISTS

Nearly forty years ago when Koko, the Lord High Executive in the "Mikado" was making his little list of society offenders who never would be missed," he included, possibly for the sake of the rhyme, the "female novelist." Possibly in the day of a squeamish and pernickety generation the lady novelist was a pest. She did not get down to brass tacks, and seemed to get her knowledge of men somewhat from the encyclopedia and somewhat from her brother, no person. The men she made were too often papier mache. They took their vices gloomily and were priggish about their virtues. But today we are getting a line of girls at the typewriters who have no illusion about men. Women like Edna Ferber, Willa Cather, Dorothy Canfield, Zona Gale, Mrs. Doland and Mrs. Wharton seem to have been through the darker channels of man's masculine internal arrangements with a flash-light and what they found they set down with rather cold deliberation. So the day of the plaster saints has passed from out literature. The men writers are ashamed to make plaster saints and the women writers know that the plaster saint is only bleached mud at best. A new book. "One of Ours," by Willa Cather makes as rugged and real a picture of a farm boy who grew to full manhood, as ever has been painted by an American. "One of Ours" is a passionate story of an aspiring youth who found manhood in service. It is the answer to "Three Soldiers," to "Winesburg, Ohio," to all the stupid Russian imitations of the Dial crowd. Miss Cather's "My Antonia" was as fine a piece of fiction as any American ever wrote. "One of Ours" keep the pace that "My Antonia" set. And if Miss Cather were alone among our women writers in her clean thinking and honest writing, we might feel that she was a throwback or a sport, or a freak of some kind. But the fact that half a dozen women writers stand beside her, makes it evident that the novel making game is not for "men only." No man in America, not even Booth Tarkington, has written better books than these women writers who are doing such splendid work just now.

This is the playtime of the white race—the days after the harvest. Of old, men capered in such glee as their hearts held after the crops were gathered, partly from gratitude and partly because the year's work was done. Sometimes the festivities were religious sometimes they were highly secular. But always the desire in the hearts of men to kick up their heels and cut high jinks after the long uncertainty of the crop season, and after the hard work of planting and garnering, has made men frisky in the autumn. So the autumn fair is as old as the plow and the scythe. In America the country fair was for years the expression of man's delight in his achievement of the year. But the country fair degenerated into a horse race and lost caste. Then came the street fair; but the carnival professionalised and commercialised the street fair; but the carnival professionalised and commercialised the street fair and it lost standing. The carnival company still pervades rural communities. But it is a small affair, and gathers people only by the hundreds, and that casually and from night to night and week to week. Moreover the best people, the 'quality' the nobility and gentry of our country towns do not patronise the travelling carnival and it is little better than the "Uncle Tom" show in the tent and is only a magnified gypsy camp.

Yet in practically every American state, some expression of the playing sense of the people is manifest this year. In Cheyenne, the whole middle mountain region gathers for the "round up," where a home talent "wild west show" is put on for three days, broncho busting, bulldogging steers, pony racing, and all sorts of rough wrangles between man and the beasts of the field keep thousands of spectators busy. Down in Idaho Springs, Colo., they are celebrating the "Days of Fifty-Nine" when the gold camp was opened in that rich region, and on every car that passes through the hills, is pasted the banner, 'Let 'em Grow," meaning that the male population shall let their beards grow in memory of the bearded pards that were. Here is community play. Not play by picked players entertaining the multitude for prizes. Down in Santa Fe, they have an Indian fiesta, where Indian arts and Indian dances and Indian games are to be seen, and the gorgeous colors of earth and sky justify bashful men flaming about in reds and yellows and greens and purples. There also is community play.

Every region is beginning to find itself in play. And the playtime is growing. Once a week the whole year around in every country town of over five thousand, the Rotarians or their rivals, the Lions or the Kiwanis, meet and sing and play horse while they eat bad lunches. The country club is an institution of the American country town, and hundreds of men take play there, and by night the socially inclined dance as their forebears danced in the primeval forests.

America seems to be coming to the realisation of the fact that fun is not sin. In that much the Puritan has lost his fight. Booze is passing; it is the pride of every play place, whether the fair, the homecoming, or the fiesta, that thousands gathered and played their heads off and not an arrest was made for drunkenness. We are separating joy and alcohol and keeping the joy.

This is a new America growing up. It is gay and decent. The eight-hour day, the low-priced car, the passing of the saloon, the coming of the movie, all tend to draw the family together, to bring people out of their homes in "innocent merriment." So the playtime of the world in America is bound to cover more days to the year than the play times of the old world. Perhaps we are breeding here a new and joyous world. Maybe the machinery we are inventing to make life easier, will also make life more beautiful, and so make us all happier. Then indeed shall we grow wise.

Diphtheria—How It May Be Avoided.

Diphtheria is usually contracted when the child has a cold. The cold prepares the child's system for the reception and development of the diphtheria germs. When there are cases of diphtheria in the neighborhood children that have colds should be kept at home and off the street until recovered. Give them Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and they will not have to remain at home long. It also cleans out the culture beds which form in a child's throat when it has a cold, and minimizes the risk of contracting infectious diseases.

How To Behave -:- By Will Cuppy

Etiquette: The Blue Book of Social Usage. By Emily Post (Mrs. Price Post). Funk and Wagnalls Company.

"Etiquette," says Mrs. Post, "is merely a collection of form by which all personal contacts in life are made smooth."

Is this not admirable? I had feared, as the result of my wide and almost continuous reading on this subject, that the author of a "Blue Book of Social Usage" would maintain at the very least that the rules of etiquette were categorical imperatives flung full-born and complete out of the whirling mists of chaos, and that their object was to teach us to be kind to dumb animals and to fit us for an existence beyond the grave. They do, so often.

Every other writer that I have encountered on etiquette, ethics, metaphysics and similar pastimes either boldly states or implies that the dignity of Best Society (the capitals are hers), although she affects for it a profund admiration. The fun in her book, and it is endless, inheres not in her own attitude toward her subject, which she is clearly entitled to and which she knows thoroughly, but in the subject itself—men and women behaving themseves, and women behaving themseves, and much better, it seems to me, than is at all necessary.

The author of "Etiquette" has succeeded best in those passages in which she has adopted a scientific point of view. Fabre tells us that the female mantis devours the male immediately after the nuptials. Mrs. Post's bride and bridegroom partake together of lobster Newburg, supreme of chicken and aspic of foie gras, consuming, you will notice, only fellow-creatures outside the family. Where the French savant tells us that certain grasshoppers can live without a brain Mrs. Post leaves us in no doubt that she has observed an analogous phenomenon in her own field. A comparative study of the uselessness of the cervical ganglion in the grass and the finale-hopper in relation to the complete functioning of the organism is yet to be made. One feels that entomology is still in its infancy.

Who, I wonder, ought to read this book? Best Society surely knows by heart all the forms by which every contact in life is made smooth. Can the socially lost be saved by perusing even 627 pages of advice? Although Mrs. Post promises that one can learn to eat asparagus, I have heard it asserted that either one always knew or never can know. I prefer to think that Titherington Smith came into the world, if not exactly trailing a portion of asparagus, at least well aware that it is not good form "to take a long dropping stalk, hold it up in he air, and catch the end of it in your mouth like a fish," and that "when the stalks are thin, it is best to cut them in half with the fork, eating the tips like all fork food" and doing the fish act only with the other end.

Supposing the saved do know what to do. Do they do it? For me the mood of fiction was persistent throughout the book, heightened as it was by constant allusions to the Topluftys, the Worldlys, the Bobo Gildings, the Oldnames and Titherington Smith, a nomenclature which relates the book though unconventionally, to the Greek comic epic and the Restoration drama. Owing to this use of label-names, I fancy that "Etiquette" is something like "Pilgrim's Progress" might have been if Christian had been more like Titherington Smith.

To be a lady, as is commonly known, is no small undertaking. Life is so complicated. What to do, for instance, about coal heavers? Turn to page 7 ("When to shake hands") and read:

"Strictly speaking, it is always her place to offer her hand or not as she chooses, but if he puts out his hand, it is rude on her part to ignore it. Nothing could be more ill-bred than to treat curtly any overture made in spontaneous friendliness. No thoroughbred lady would ever refuse to shake any hand that is honorable, not even the hand of a coal heaver, at the risk of her fresh, white glove."

This worries me a little. If a gentleman goes about making spontaneous overtures, it seems as though he might learn to heave something nicer than coal. If he insists upon heaving coal, why not wash up when he feels an approaching attack of spontaneity? Where did this happen? On the wagon or in the cellar? Had this lady a caveman complex, or was she only kidding him into filling the coal bin.

I can only hope that the coal heaver kept his walls up. Perhaps he did. For, "to be courteously polite, and yet keep one's walls up, is a thing every thoroughbred person knows how to do—and a thing that every one who is trying to become such must learn to do." But was he a thoroughbred, or even trying to become such? Everything depends upon whether or not he had the support, as it were, of the suspenders of etiquette.

Even a manual laborer, it seems to me, could become a gentleman if he put his mind to it. The candidate must merely remember to take off his hat when a lady enters the elevator, or a funeral is passing, never to nudge, push or pat people, nor "so much as put his finger tips on a lady," ("keep your hands to yourself," page 96 and not to eat the table decorations, though if he does swallow a few of the scenic effects "no great harm is done." Also, "no gentleman ever goes to a lady's house if affected by acohol," the presumption being that he must wait till he gets there. In a word, be simple. But not too simple. And keep your walls up.

"Well-bred people," one learns, avoid certain words and expressions that are admitted by etymology. Why? Don't ask me. They never say "Do you not?" preferring always, "Don't you?" For myself, I find that I must give up "Well, I declare" and "'Pon my word," and also "Pray, accept my thanks for the flattering ovation you have tendered me."

The best people often write, as well as read and figure, since they are called upon to compose letters of thanks. Mrs. Post advises the novice in this art to study first the Bible for simplicity of style, and then, for unnamed virtues, "such authors as Robert Louis Stevenson, E. S. Martin, Agnes Repplier, John Galsworthy and Max Beerbohm." Those who have little Latin and less Greek and no English whatever may find Beerbohm hard to duplicate at first. I suggest that only the worthies try Max.

One word more. "People of position are people of position the world over." Not only that, but "All people of position talk alike, behave alike and live alike." I felt sure that Mrs. Post was going to add that one person of position was born every minute. But no. Great heavens! These p. of p. are Best Society. They are ladies and gentlemen.

Well, one must make the best of things. I have read the book and I suppose that I am now a person of position. I am a gentleman. Should I from time to time see fit not to act as one nobody can say that I don't know how. If ever I am invited to dinner where butter is served, or a separate vegetable saucer (see page 585) I shall do the only thing a man of my social standing conceivably could do. I shall get up and leave.

England's Great Church Crumbling To Dust

London—Are the natural processes of time to accomplish what the enemy air raiders could not—the destruction of St. Paul's cathedral, which, with Westminster Abbey, form London's two most famous edifices?

That the great cathedral would be wrecked, or at least seriously damaged, by German bombs was a constant fear in the four years of air raids—a fear entirely justified by experiences elsewhere.

It appears, from German records, that while St. Paul's usually was looked for as a landmark by the German raiders, none ever started out with the deliberate intention of destroying it. If it had been wrecked by an explosion it would have been by accident. This nearly happened.

St. Paul's, like every other great structure in London, had but a gambler's chance of safety in the war.

Now far more than a gambler's chance of evil threatens the vast church built by that greatest of all architects, Sir Christopher Wren, which for centuries has been holder of equal honors with Westminster Abbey as London's most famous structure.

Time, as devastating and even the ceyebrated structure? It has enemy which has attacked St. Paul's. Will the ingenuity of man be quick enough to save the celebrated structure? It has been discovered that the damage already has gone far.

Age has crept into its joints, so to speak, and this has been accelerated by the constant jar of the great modern city's life, which was not foreseen and therefore was not provided for by the genuinely inspired architect who made the plans.

EDIFICES DECOMPOSING

In plain fact the vast pile has been slowly decomposing and only now is the public which loves it, reveres it and admires it, fully informed as to the perils which do not surround it, but rather and more tragically permeate it.

The dean and chapter of St. Paul's have just come out with an appeal to the public for the cathedral's salvation.

It seems that, long ago, frightened by signs which had begun to show they ordered a survey and the results of that investigation are proving to be far more startling even than it was believed that they would be.

The present St. Paul's is by no means one of the oldest of the great British churches. Many are of greater antiquity. But the spot on which it stands has been "hallowed" as the canon of St. Paul says, "by more than thirteen hundred years" of association with Christian worship.

It has been described, to the delight of all England, as the "parish church of the British empire," and, even to a greater extent than Westminster Abbey, which is the burial place of kings and queens and others of the truly great, it is regarded as such throughout that empire.

At the time the United States entered the war one of the most significant church services in the history of English-speaking peoples was held in St. Paul's, when, for the first time since America became an independent nation, the British and American flags were officially interwined there and at the Houses of Parliament.

On that day the pulpit was shared by British and American clergy, and, as was fitting, the good American divine who preached was strong in his American accent, as the British officiating ecclesiastic was emphatically broad in the handling of his "a's."

Ambassador Page and his official family marched down the aisle in an impressive column while the greatest in all England and, indeed, the greatest in the empire (for London was the center of the empire then as it never was before or since) gazed with mute thanksgiving in their eyes because this was the outward and visible sign that millions of America's men and money had joined the allies at a time when, had they not done so, admittedly the prospects would have been desperate.

The king and queen and royal family were there, and for the first time in many months there was the light of real conviction and confidence in their eyes and the sharp tautness of revived energy in their step.

SAW DANGER YEARS AGO

Nine years ago it was officially recognised that work must be done upon the dome of St. Paul's if that tremendous golden landmark was to be preserved for future generations as a work of art and symbol of the British people's faith in God.

St. Paul's is the largest and most magnificant of the whole world's Protestant churches, although less beautiful perhaps than Westminster Abbey, with its more impressive gothic architecture.

If it should crumble into ruins, now, as some say there is danger that it may do, it would not be the first time that a great edifice upon its site has done so.

Legend, not absolutely reliable history, says that this site was first occupied by a great church in the third century, when Ethelbert of Rent is supposed to have been bishop of Lonodn.

The first reliable records are those left by the Venerable Bede, who declared in 610 A. D. Christian church had been constructed long before upon this site where once stood a pagan temple dedicated by the Romans to Diana. The present Christian cathedral supplants several others which were destroyed by fire, one after the other. One of these was replaced by a great church by William the Conqueror.

This in its turn was swept away by the great fire of London, one of the most terrible events of history, and following this the present structure was designed by the greatest architect of his time, and, indeed, one of the greatest of all time, Sir Christopher Wren.

It is noteworthy that every architectural imperfection in the building, speaking from a purely artistic standpoint—and experts say that there are many—is due to restrictions put upon this heaven gifted architect by the authorities, who controlled his work.

In the times of James the First an edifice upon the site was known as "Old St. Paul's" and was found to be crumbling from great age. It was restored at the instance and largely at the expense of the celebrated Inigo Jones and in this restoration art is said to have been subordinated to the personal tastes of some in power whose judgment was not good.

The building as designed by Sir Christopher Wren would have been sublime if his designs had been completely followed. But not even the meddling of the inartistic and inept was great enough seriously to dim the grandeur of the famous architect's supreme conception.

Whenever Wren was left alone the building was and is superb.

Its cost was literally stupendous, the sum of something more than 4 million dollars. In those days, when days' wages were a tenth as much as now and professional fees were a mere pittance if compared with those which are allowed today, 4 million dollars was a sum of almost unbelievable grandeur.

CRUMBLING TO DUST

The material used throughout the edifice and now found to be seriously crumbling in more places than one, is the celebrated Portland stone which elsewhere, wherever it has been used in the United Kingdom, has been found to be amazingly secure and permanent.

Even more serious, perhaps, in one sense, than the crumbling of the great stone piers, which is said to have been discovered to be notable, is the cracking and disintegration of interior decorations of great significance and beauty.

Wonderful mosaics, splendid paintings, and, especially, the magnificent series of frescoes illustrating the life of St. Paul, which are on the interior of the dome, are among those decorations which now are endangered by what seems to be general disintegration affecting the old building.

Among other points of interest in the great and famous building is the whispering gallery, one of the most notable in the world.

A person whispering softly at one side of it can be heard distinctly on the other although many hundred feet intervene. The magic of this whispering gallery is even greater, it is said than that of a similar architectural freak in the capital at Washington.

It cannot be said that St. Paul's is as much of a national shrine as Westminster Abbey, but in it are buried several great national heroes, including Lord Nelson, the Duke of Wellington and Sir John Moore.

Americans will look with far less awe (and perhaps with more satisfaction), at the tomb of Lord Howe, who was the hated commander of the British forces during a good part of the American Revolutionary War.

The "Painters' Corner" of St. Paul's is as notable as the world famous "Poets' Corner" of Westminster Abbey. Here the visitor will find the tombs of Millais, Sir Joshua Reynolds, and others, and here, by the way, is that of Sir Christopher Wren himself.

Here, also, is the tomb of Dr. Johnson.

COST HALF MILLION

One of the bizarre suggestions which have been made with regard to the great cost of the repairs which must be made upon St. Paul's if it is to stand, concerns America.

The original cost of the cathedral, which in very sense is a national structure, the church of England being as much a part of the British nation as the house of commons, was raised by a special tax on coal.

Now that Britain is expected to export and already has exported much coal to the United States as a result of the American miners' strike, it is suggested that all such coal exports shall be taxed for the repairs to the great edifice.

It is estimated that the repairs absolutely necessary to the preservation of the structure will cost, at the very beginning, not less ½ million dollars.

It is said not to be impossible that the survey which it is regarded as essential should be made and which, itself, irrespective of the repairs, will cost a ¼ million dollars, may reveal some even more startling situations.

The lovers of the celebrated structure are literally waiting with fear and trembling for the report of the experts.

Find Lost Herd Of American Bison

Sanderson, Texas.—At intervals for the last thirty years reports have been brought out of the wild region to the south of here of the existence, in a hidden and rockwalled valley, of a herd of buffaloes. The lattest account of this wonderful and mysterious valley with its imprisoned buffaloes was recited here a few days ago by Andreas Lopez, an educated and well-to-do Mexican ranchman, whose property is situated on the Mexico side of the Rio Grande.

It was a remarkable tale which Lopez told a group of friends as they sat around the table at the Southern Pacific eating house. He said that he had been ranching just across the river in Mexico for nearly forty years and that a few miles from ranch headquarters was the canyon made by Marvillas Creek on the Texas side. So far as his knowledge went, this canyon had never been explored.

In a spirit of adventure he and one of his cowboys, Manuel Flores, set out about two weeks ago to see what a tramp up the bed of the creek that runs at the bottom of the precipitous walls would lead to. They carried enough food with them to last several days and rolls of blankets upon their backs.

DISCOVER A GREAT VALLEY

"We had no difficulty in crossing the Rio Grande and entering the mouth of the canyon," Lopez said. "For several miles the walls of the gorge almost met several feet overhead. It was a gloomy but inspiring sight. On the afternoon of the second day, when we had reached a point perhaps fifteen miles from the lower end of the canyon, we came upon a solid barrier of rock which rose to a height of more than six hundred feet and over which flowed the little stream of water known as Maravillas Creek.

"We had difficulty in climbing to the top of the wall, but when we had done so the sight that met our eyes was one that will remain always in my memory. Before us lay an almost perfectly level valley that must have been forty miles one way by twenty-five the other in size. It was carpeted with a luxuriant growth of grass. Crossing this level expanse at intervals were streams of crystal water which came from springs.

"All around the valley towered mountains that ranged from a few hundred to perhaps two thousand feet high. Clumps of trees here and there set off the beauty of the landscape. It was very evident that in this valley the rainfall was abundant—the rank vegetation was evidence enough of that fact. I arrived at a solution of why this was true that was satisfactory to my mind, and it was this: Sweeping across the Rio Grande from the desert region of northern Mexico is a prevailing hot wind. It enters the valley through the numerous canyons that lead through the mountain range on the south.

"The air in coming through the deep gorges cools perceptibly and when it reaches the valley clouds quickly form and the rain is precipitated. It is a local meteorological phenomenon not at all uncommon to other parts of the world and even in this country, I am told. At any rate, there was a good shower of rain every afternoon during the ten days that I and Flores spent in the valley.

THE LOST BUFFALO HERD

"But now the astonishing thing of our exploit was the discovery of a herd of more than 500 buffaloes, which were contentedly living in the valley, completely cut off from the rest of the world. It was on the second day of our visit to the valley that we came upon the buffaloes. We had seen evidence of some kind of large animal almost from the very time we climbed to the top of the wall that marked the end of the canyon, but we never dreamed that the tracks were those of buffaloes.

"We had climbed to a vantage point on one of the hills or mountains in order to get a better view of the surroundings when we saw in the distance a big bunch of animals grazing. We made our way to them and were astounded to find that they were buffaloes. It is my theory that the nucleus of the present big herd of these animals entered the valley through a narrow passageway in the fringe of almost impassable mountains that completely surround the place, and that an avalanche of rock closed the egress and the buffaloes were made prisoners there.

"How long ago that was there is no means of knowing. It has been more than forty years since a wild buffalo was seen in this part of the border region of Texas. We remained in the valley until our food supplies began running short and then departed the way we had come. Another striking feature of the place is that it is the home of countless numbers of birds of brilliant plumage—birds, the kind of which I have never before seen."

Mr. Lopez's story was received with credence here, especially by old-time ranchmen, who know the nature of the region that lies between here and the Rio Grande.

Friends And Foes Of Fordney Bill Shout Hurrah And Wield The Mallet

Steadfast Republican Papers See Advantages While Opposition Press Hammers New Legislation And Calls It Asinine

The boy's knife which had had six new blades and seven new handles and yet was the same knife after all was not unlike the Fordney-McCumber tariff, which was the same tariff bill even after it had been amended three thousand times and then changed around in the Conference Committee, comments the Literary Digest of Sept. 23. Yet, while many of the vigorous expressions of public opinion given out by the press during the tariff debate are still valid, they do not all of them apply to the finished measure which is presented to a waiting electorate six weeks before the date of the Congressional elections. The chief objection urged against this "most amended of all tariffs" by Democrats, independent editors, and some Republican journals is that it will increase the cost of living. The friends of the bill, on the other hand, can see no necessity for any very great increase in prices under it, and do insist on the need of tariff protection for our producers at a time when the low exchange value of foreign currencies enables foreign manufacturers to compete most dangerously in the American markets. The issue was simplified at the last moment by the elimination of several points of controversy such as the dye embargo and the free zone plan, and the practical abandonment of "American valuation." Criticism of the Fordney Bill as the creature of a conference committee and not of the legislators was, of course, put out of date by the House's refusal to accept the committee's insertion of a dye embargo and a potash tariff in the bill against the desires of both Houses. In general, the bill is accepted as a compromise between the House rates and the Senate rates, leaning the more toward the latter.

While not all of Congressman Fordney's ideas appear in the finished bill, the Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee feels that his great ambition "to help restore protection and help bring the country back to pre-war prosperity, so far as the tariff can accomplish that result," has been realised. The Michigan Congressman dismisses disdainfully the assertions that the new schedules will mean oppressively high prices for the consumer:

"As usual the cry is being raised by our enemies that the law will increase the cost of living by means of a tariff tax. It is said that everything people consume is taxed. Women are made to believe that the new tariff will tax all domestic and home-made merchandise, such as stockings, gloves, corsets, dresses, etc. It is not even explained that the tariff will not be on domestic merchandise but on foreign imported merchandise. This 'higher-cost-of-living' stuff has been worked to death. There is nothing in it. If prices go up at all within the next two months or any time before election, it will be the result of the work of profiteers who want to deceive the people."

DECLARES LAW SOUND

In the same dispatch to the New York Evening Mail, Mr. Edward Nelson Dingley quotes Senator McCumber as declaring that the new law is "sound and American" in "its principles and purposes" and "just to the farmers and manufacturers." This correspondent—whose name is reminiscent of old tariff battles—seems to agree with both the statesmen he quotes. He has no patience with the idea that increased duties necessarily mean increased prices:

"In the first place, not in all cases is the duty added to the American price of a foreign article. Not infrequently domestic competition lowers prices.

"In the second place, the price of a similar domestic article in the American market is not always measured by the price of the foreign article.

"It is not known what the ratio of foreign merchandise imported and consumed bears to the domestic merchandise consumed. Probably it is impossible to tell.

"The American people will pay higher prices under the Fordney-McCumber tariff only if dishonest merchants engage in a plot to plunder and deceive."

Such stedfast Republican dailies as the Hartford Courant and the Cincinnati Times-Star insist that the new tariff laws will ward off such a period of hard times as would have come after the enactment of the Underwood tariff had it not been for the outbreak of the Great War. Already, says the Connecticut editor, "our markets are being flooded with cheap products from Europe and without a protective tariff the flood would become a deluge." "Tariff Rates Not Exorbitant" runs a headline in President Harding's Marion Star. The new bill, it declares, "carries the lowest average ad valorem rate on all imports that has ever characterised a Republican law and, when depreciated foreign currencies are considered, spells protection with a mighty small 'p.' To prove that the new duties will not necessarily mean a great rise in prices, the Star calls attention to figures brought up in Congress showing "the profits of importers on the landed price of foreign goods ranging from 157 to 2,370 percent." Writing in the Newark Sunday Call, Mr. John J. McGowan argues that "except in isolated instances where the duty on one class of goods is out of proportion to other duties, tariffs will not change the relative value of goods to one another. That is, it will not raise real prices." Of course, it will add to inflation just as any tax would, he says. "We are going to have both tariff and income tax, but the more we have of a reasonable tariff the less we shall have of income tax, and since there must be inflation it matters little whether it is caused by a tariff or by some other taxa." The Cleveland Commercial cites Congressman Longworth to back up its argument that if the existing emergency tariff law, with its high duties on wool and woolens has not appreciably increased the cost of clothing, the new schedules are not likely to. To the Kansas City Journal (Rep.) it seems "fatuous" to argue that "every dollar which shall be paid in duties will mean another dollar wrested from the consumer." In framing this bill, continues the Journal, "the Republican party has once more laid the foundations of enduring material prosperity" and "the Fordney-McCumber Act will undoubtedly go down in the economic history of the country as one of the wisest and most effective measures of its kind ever enacted by Congress." As another mid-western Republican paper, the Omaha Bee, asserts, "it will not close an American factory, it will not throw an American workman out of a job, and it will not compel an American farmer, cattle-grower, hog-raiser or flock-master to sell his output in the home market against the competition of the world." In California, whose products have been well taken care of in the Fordney-McCumber schedules, the Los Angeles Times (Rep.) characterises the new law as "an honest attempt to adjust duties on the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number." And in the Oakland Tribune (Rep.) we read:

"The Fordney-McCumber tariff bill gives assurance to industry and the farmer that an end is coming to a fight against those newer odds which confronted them when Europe, with its low exchange, started in to recoup its losses. There are few fields of endeavor, in the factory or on the farm, which have not been menaced by competition from a source where labor is cheap and from whence there is a growing effort to reap American dollars in exchange for depreciated currency."

ASKS WHY LOWER

After making a resume of tariff legislation throughout the world, the Troy Times (Rep.) says that "other nations are shielding their home industries and at the same time seeking to have our doors opened more widely for admission of their products into the United States" and asks, "is there any sound argument in favor of lowering our tariff values when other nations are building walls that serve to exclude American goods?"

But while the new tariff law is thus vigorously defended in the Republican press, we are reminded by independent journals like the Syracuse Herald and Indianapolis News that some of the most important Republican dailies must be counted among the foes of the bill. Republican press opposition has been quoted in earlier tariff articles in The Literary Digest, but we may notice that the St. Louis Globe-Democrat now calls the legislation "a grave blunder, as dangerous politically as it is economically." The Philadelphia Bulletin's (Rep.) headline characterisation of it is "The Tariff of High Prices." The Buffalo Commercial (Rep.) "does not hesitate to say that in its opinion this is a bad bill" which "will have the effect of unwarrrantably increasing the cost of living." All down the line of the new schedules there is, we are told, "such an increase in import duties, the inference is unmistakable that this tariff bill was drawn not to protect industry, but to protect war profits." The Rochester Post Express (Rep.) says:

"The bill is not a protective tariff, but an iniquitous imposition of burdens upon the consuming American public, which includes all the people of our country. The rates in it are in general so high that they will increase measurably the cost of living during a period in which every possible means should be used to reduce our living costs."

To the Minneapolis Journal (Rep.) it seems "that Congress has gone too far in boosting the schedules." And in another Middle-Western city an independent journal, which is a recognised mouthpiece of progressive Republicanism, condemns the Fordney-McCumber bill in unmistakable language. To quote the Kansas City Star:

"The tariff bill agreed to in conference is the perfect product of log-rolling protectionism gone mad. At a time when America especially needs the foreign market, the tariff-makers have done their best to prevent trade with the outside world. Under guise of affording protection from cut-throat competition they have given favored manufacurers duties that would have made the framers of the malodorous Payne-Aldrich Bill gasp. They have tried to pacify the farmer by giving him a meaningless high duty on wheat, which we export, while they have impaired his ability to sell his products in Europe and increased the price of every manufactured product he has to buy. Congress will hear from the farming West once the West discovers what has happened in the name of a bill to protect American labor."

SAYS IT'S WORST

In the considered judgment of such a representative of business opinion as the New York Journal of Commerce, the Fordney-McCumber tariff is "by far the worst of its kind that has been adopted since the Civil War."

What the enactment of this tariff will mean is evident enough to the Newark News (Ind.), "in fact it is happening"—

"Prices are rising fast. Foreign wool prices abroad go down as Boston forecasts a rise in the domestics. Steel and iron already are up ten times, since January, as large a percentage as steel labor was granted the other day. Textile men get into contact and ask each other how much the public will stand.

"Back of the real improvement that has followed a return of public confidence, based upon getting back to work and needing the products of industry, sneaks the upward push of prices, not based so much upon the promise of recovery from the fears and dangers of the past as upon the assurance that the consumer must pay through the nose because the gates will be shut against competition."

Democratic papers like the Richmond Times-Dispatch, Dayton News, Atlanta Constitution, and Springfield Illinois State Register all agree that the effect of the new tariff will be to increase the cost of living and to make Democratic votes this fall and two years hence. The Raleigh News and Observer (Dem.) is delighted with the New York Herald's designation of the new bill as "the damn-fool tariff," adding: "That is what the people will be calling it when they find that it imposes burdens of indirect taxation of $3,000,000,000 yearly upon them and opens no markets for their surplus farm and factory products." Many Democratic papers quote from the Washington correspondence of the New York World the following estimates, said to be made by Treasury and Customs authorities of what certain of the new tariff schedules, as passed by the Senate will cost the American public:

Wool manufactures	$655,000,000
Cotton "	583,000,000
Silk "	150,000,000
Clothing	600,000,000
Sugar	580,000,000
Cutlery and hardware	170,000,000
Chinaware	12,000,000

PRESIDENTIAL POWER

In analysing the bill as reported from the conference committee before the House had rejected the dye embargo and potash tariff clauses, the Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune points out that it much more resembles the Senate than the House bill. The rates, he says, are considered, upon the whole, to be above the Payne-Aldrich level. An outstanding feature of the bill is the flexible tariff provision giving the President power to raise and lower rates on recommendation of the tariff commission and even to change from foreign to "American" valution. The provisions in effect will transfer the power of tariff-making up to a certain point from Congress to the White House, and the Tariff Commission will thus become a highly important body." This observer points out that "with respect to the rates which affect consumers most closely, the conferees kept them at a high level."

"The agricultural tariff bloc practically drove the conferees into keeping most of the high agricultural rates of the Senate bill. Thus, wheat is kept at 30 cents a bushel, which is the Senate figure. Corn is kept at 15 cents, rye at 15 cents, oats at 15 cents and barley at 20 cents a bushel. These are the figures of the bill as it passed the Senate. The cattle, meats, fish and milk rates of the Senate bill, with little exception, are carried into the conference report.

"Th Senate bill rate on sugar was 2.30 cents a pound with 1.84 cents on Cuban, as compared with 2 cents in the House bill and 1.60 cents on Cuban. The conferees shaded down the Senate rates a little, making the general rate 2.20 cents and the Cuban rate 1.76.

"The wool rate agreed on by the conferees is 31 cents a clean content. The Senate bill rate was 33 and the House rate 25 and 26."

The Fordney-McCumber rates on certain articles of popular interest as well as the rates in the Underwood Bill of 1913, and the famous Payne-Aldrich tariff of 1909, as gleaned from newspaper summaries and Associated Press dispatches, are gathered together in the accompanying table.

Dictionary Jaunts

The old lady who remarked of a dictionary, which she had been dipping into for the first time in her life, that the book was interesting, but changed the subject pretty often, pointed out at least one of its qualities which most people seem to miss altogether. There have been readers who found the dictionary one of the most interesting books in the world, because it changes the subject so often; and some few readers, like Lowell, have confessed that they read it through once a year. Nevertheless, by far the greater number of men and women look upon it as merely a reference-book which should be in every household; and they would never think of calling it interesting.

Many a family dictionary is of an antiquated edition. It gathers dust in some out-of-the-way cupboard, or lies buried under magazines on the shelf under the sitting-room table. Its chief use is to make a high chair for Johnny or Sally during their ages of most rapid growth. It is sometimes used for a door-stop or a lamp-stand. A friend of mine, during a discussion as to what one book should be taken to a desert island, voted for an unabridged dictionary, because it would serve for a raft in getting from the wreck to the shore, and on shore could be used as a seat or a footstool, and would supply more paper for kindling than any other volume. He also said that the unlimited leisure one could enjoy on a desert island would give one time enough at last to study the section on disputed pronunciation.

I think my friend's is a bright suggestion for other reasons. I find that I am almost afraid to consult an unabridged dictionary, because once started I can never stop. Wishing to know whether stratagem is spelled with an a or an e, my eye falls upon a picture of a stereoscope, an instrument I could never understand, and I pause to study it for a moment; and then my eye jumps to stethoscope, and after a while back to steroisomerism; and, while I am saying the alphabet over on my fingers, I espy sternutatory, which looks like an amusing word, and I snap that up on the way to strappado. By this time I have forgotten what I was looking for; and, while I have learned a good deal, I feel conscience-stricken over the time I have wasted. Now on a desert island, time would have no significance whatever, and sitting in one's cave during the long tropical evenings, one could browse about in the dictionary to one's heart's content, without caring whether one found a word or not. There would be plenty of time also to study all those astounding charts and plates which we never have time to study—the Parts of a Full-rigged Ship, the Types of the Races of Mankind, the System of Wireless Telegraphy, the Cross Section of a Steam Engine, the Common Wild Flowers, and the Game, Marine, and Freshwater Birds; and to read over the lists of authors, composers, inventors, scientists, and signers of the Declaration of Independence.

Anywhere other than on a desert island, there is only one period of life during which we have all the time in the world, and that is during childhood; but only a rare child seems ever to discover the fascination that lies between the covers of an unabridged dictionary. I say "unabridged," because that is the only kind of dictionary in which one can browse with any great pleasure; and I think that every family should mortgage the house if need be to obtain one. Having purchased it, they should see that it is properly and conveniently displayed on a stand or table dedicated to no other use, and they should encourage the children to use it, freely but reverently.

When we consider that there is no mark of cultivation and of social competency that can compare for an instant in importance with the use of good English, and that in a very literal sense the growth of intelligence is dependent upon the growth of vocabulary, it seems strange that not more people realise the value of fostering the "dictionary habit" in early childhood. Teachers are doing their best to foster it in their pupils by various ingenious methods, such as dictionary drill and dictionary games; but we Americans have yet to learn that a child is not educated wholly in school. It is one of our national pastimes to criticise schools and teachers because they do not have better success with our children; and yet a little elementary arithmetic would convince us that in expecting them to counteract in the hour or so a day given to English all the influences of the other twelve or fifteen, we are expecting the impossible.

The modern makers of dictionaries are devising many amusing and interesting games to be played with the dictionary, and any grown person can with little thought invent many for himself. For example, on a rainy day or of an evening the children could be set to looking up all the birds or flowers or precious stones they could think of; or they could hold a competition to see who could find ten words in the shortest time; or who could remember the largest number of the parts of a ship after looking at the diagram for one minute. Or they could see how many familiar and how many unfamiliar words they find on one page, selected by an adult; or how many words they could form by adding affixes to a single root, comparing the result with the list given in the dictionary. A game that older children almost always find amusing is played as follows: Someone prepares a list of ten or twenty words chosen at random, and then the players write a brief story in which they try to introduce all the words of the list, looking up those they are not sure of.

A comparison of the results always arouses laughter, because of the variety of yarns composed, and because of the mistakes some are sure to make. The same game can be played with pairs of synonyms, like simple and plain; relic and remains; stretch and strain; frank and sincere; teacher and trainer; messenger and envoy; revelation and exposure; discovery and invention, and so forth; and the children then write a story in which they use every one in such a way as to make the difference of meaning clear, consulting the dictionary when they need to. It is surprising in how short a space one can introduce even twenty or thirty words chosen at random, and use them without any straining of the sense.

We sometimes forget that the most amusing games are to some degree intellectual, and that perhaps the most amusing of all are those in which there is some combat of wits.

Two Old Quail Watch Guinea Hen Raise Their Family

Stroudsburg, Pa., (by mail)—In Barrett township, this county, there may be seen today the unusual spectacle of a guinea hen mothering a whole covey of little quails which she herself hatched out.

The flock of the old guinea is made up about half of little guinea chickens and half of the quail. Joseph Smith, proprietor of the place, is naturally very much interested in the peculiar natural history, and has called the queer little family to the attention of neighbors. To make the matter all the more peculiar, two old quail live right in with the old guinea and the little ones.

Asia Banking Corporation

October 21, 1922

Spot and forward bar silver were each down 3-16d in London yesterday.

The New York price declined to 66¾ cents and the London-New York cross rate improved to 446⅝.

Our Official quotations here today were unchanged from yesterday and our market opened steady and became firm later on in the day.

The lowest rates at which business was done were 3-3½ for Sterling, 73¾ for Gold Dollars and 65¾ for Yen.

At the close however, there were sellers of Sterling at 3-3⅜ for all deliveries up to China New Years and of Gold Dollars at 74.

There were sellers of Yen at the same time at 65½, the market at that time being very firm indeed with speculators strong sellers.

Banks were quoting 3-4½ for Sterling bills, 75¾ for Gold Dollar bills and 1025 for Franc bills.

China again sold silver in London yesterday and India bought.

The market there as well as in New York being reported as steady.

OLYMPIC THEATRE

Opening, Thursday November 16

Thurs. Fri. Nights & Sat. Matinee (Nov. 18)

"SMILIN' THRU"

the fantastic comedydrama with MISS BLOOD as the "Bride" and MR. FRAWLEY. An altogether charming piece with first a smile, then a tear. In "Smilin' Thru" Miss Blood wears the famous 'fade in fade out radiolite gown,' the only one of its kind outside Ziegfeld's "Follies" and Irving Berlin's "Music Box Revue."

Sat. and Sun. Eves, Nov. 18, 19

"THE GOLD DIGGERS"

the scintillating farce with ADELE BLOOD. Several Broadway songs will be introduced.

Mon. and Tues.

"ANNA CHRISTIE"

the great O'Neill drama with MISS BLOOD and Mr. FRAWLEY.

Wed. and Thurs.

"KEMPY"

a comedy of home life with MR. FRAWLEY. "Kempy" has been playing to capacity in New York for eight months.

Fri. Sat. Matinee and Night

"THE CAT AND THE CANARY"

a shivery, mystery play which is now packin' 'em in at the National Theatre in New York. Now in its second year.

Sun. and Mon. Nov. 26 and 27.

"LAWFUL LARCENY"

society comedy-drama with ADELE BLOOD. Miss Blood wears smart Fifth Avenue gowns in this one.

Tues. and Wed.

"THE FIRST YEAR"

a 'homey' comedy with MR. FRAWLEY. They say the first year of married life is the hardest—?

Thurs. and Fri. (Dec. 1).

"ENTER MADAME"

a futuristic comedy. The story of a temperamental prima donna, with MISS BLOOD.

Sat. Dec. 2. (Matinee)

"ADAM AND EVA"

Domestic trifle.

Sat. and Sun. Nights.

"THE FRENCH DOLL"

a sparkling play with a few songs. Miss BLOOD as the 'perfect farceuse'

Those who will appear in support of Miss Blood include artists, all of whom have played in metropolitan productions. They are:

Bernard Nedell, Betty Barnicoat, Herbert Light, Florence Roberts, Dorris Kemper, Alden MacClaskey, Helen Barnes, Gordon Davis, Lester Sybe, Charles Clapp, Mary Adams.

Mission Secretary Arrives To Study New Field In China

Rev. H. H. Barton Sent Out By New Zealand Presbyterian Church

The Rev. H. H. Barton, newly appointed Foreign Missions Secretary of the Presbyterian Church of New Zealand, accompanied by Mrs. Barton, arrived here yesterday by the steamer President Grant to begin study of his new field at first hand.

The Rev. Barton was head of a flourishing church in Dunedin when he was called, by the unanimous vote of the General Assembly, to undertake the secretarial duties of the foreign mission work his church carries on in India and South China. Mr. Barton is also largely interested in Bible Society work, having been secretary of the Otago Bible Society of New Zealand for a good many years.

IRENE CASTLE in The Invisible Bond
A Paramount-Artcraft Picture

Actress, dancer, leader of fashion—in all these roles the name of Irene Castle is a household word. And in all these roles she appears in "The Invisible Bond." But beneath is something bigger, fuller, deeper—the role of Irene Castle as wife and mother.

The story of a woman who saw another, in the fast set of New York, lure away her husband, yet remained true and won in the end.

Beautiful scenes, charming gowns, an absorbing drama and a splendid cast. Founded on Sophie Kerr Underwood's novel, "The See-Saw." You'll be mighty glad you came!

A PIP OF A PICTURE!—THE MOST TALKED OF SCREEN PLAY OF THE SEASON

A PIQUANT STORY OF LOVE AND LOVES FILLED WITH PITHY HUMOR PRODUCTIVE OF A THOUSAND LAUGHS.

——What You Will See in "OCCASIONALLY YOURS"——

A Gay Dog and Clever Pup who have the same outlook on Life.
Why it doesn't pay for a woman to be serious with man.
How a rich artiste "works" in his Studio.
How venus conceals a pair of Dice. Some Job!
The Straight Laced Puritanical aunt who wrongly assayed. Choicely Filled Lace Hose at Half their Value.

The Naughty Sweetie Blues as an Inspiration for hard work.
How a woman married a man she did not love to be near the man she loved.
Why some men are too old to marry and some girls are too young to love.

Weather Report

Oct. 20.—High readings in Manchuria and Central China.

A depression crosses Lake Baikal, travelling eastwards.

The monsoon prevails at most places along our coasts; cyclonic circulation off eastern Japan.

Cloudy but fine weather at Shanghai and in the Yangtsze Valley; rain and fog along the coasts of Fukien.

Oct. 21.—A little mist, but fine and cool weather.

The breeze tends to veer to the South quadrant.

Pressure steady in the neighborhood of the normal value.

The Week's Market

PIECE-GOODS

There is no great change to report; numerous enquiries are afoot from consuming centers and are to a limited extent being fed from second-hands, but the process of stiffening Tael prices is both tedious and difficult and present local values are seldom attractive to Importers. It is, however, decidedly cheering to experience more active clearances and as lower Exchange debars replacing to any extent, prices must improve here as stocks shrink.

Dealers report sales of White Shirtings to the Yangtsze Ports and they have further enquiries, but sales are temporarily checked by small advances asked. Szechuen also enquires for Greys and Whites, but are content to wait for bargains and find holders not too anxious to slaughter stocks, owing to declining Exchange.

Home Market: Despite slightly higher Cotton quotations, there is no firmness in cloth values and makers are apparently loath to miss new business. There is no question that the tendency is for a gradual easing in replacing costs and this inclines dealers to be content with limited forward booking.

Auction prices showed an all round improvement and bidding was keen to fill trade enquiries —mainly from Tsingtau and the Yangtsze Ports. Quantities were practically unchanged and clearances of earlier purchases have appreciably improved.

PRODUCE

There has been little of a startling nature this week in the produce market. There have been enquiries from England for sessamum seeds, and the market has advanced about 40 candereens per picul as a result of this enquiry. The drop in exchange is likely to facilitate business, although so far nothing of a heartening nature has transpired. Local speculators have been buying sessamum seeds for spot delivery.

There is little doing in soya beans, the buyers in Shanghai holding off and asking for cheaper rates. The Dairen market has been declining for some days owing to the decrease in demand from China and Japan and the anticipation of a rich harvest in Manchuria this year. London has been buying the new crop, November shipment, at £10⅝. The London market shows a downward tendency for soya bean oil.

Stocks of rapeseed on the Shanghai market are small, and there is almost no enquiry. In horsebeans there is nothing doing.

A small business was done this week in cotton seed cakes, and the market has closed quiet.

No new transactions have been reported in groundnuts, London being buyers at 18s. 9d. per cwt. for January-February shipment for the shelled and 20s. 4½d. per cwt. for the unshelled, cif. London. Chinese gallnuts are quoted on the London Produce Exchange at 62s. 6d. for the new crop, October-November shipment, while dried eggs have buyers at 9d. per lb. spot.

During the first half of this year Great Britain imported 710,000 tons of oil seeds, an increase of 80,000 tons as compared with the corresponding period last year.

The imports of unrefined oil into London and Great Britain during the first half of this year were 69,000 thousand tons, including 12,000 tons of soya oil against 5,000 tons in the previous year.

Prices on the New York market for some of the principal North China products are these:

China Wood Oil, 13 cents gold per lb.

Refined Peanut Oil, 11 cents per lb.

Soya Bean Oil, 9 cents gold per lb.

Crude Cotton Oil, 7½ cents per lb.

Rapeseed Oil, 78 cents per gallon.

SILK

In their weekly report on the silk market, Messrs. William Little and Company write as follows:

Our last report was dated October 13.

White Silk.—The decline in exchange has enabled a few transactions to go through. Prices are inclined to be mixed.

Tsatlee Filatures.—Grasshopper 1 and 2, Tls. 1,040 av.

Tsatlee New Style.—Common Tls. 965 to Tls. 952½.

Steam Filatures are quiet but steady.

Tussah Filatures 8 coc.—A small business has been done at Tls. 760 to 780 av. for Best grades. Market dull.

Cables from Japan put down the price of Shinshui No. 1 Yen 2,100 with a firm market at the decline.

SHARES

In their weekly report on the share market, Messrs. J. P. Bisset and Company state as follows:

The improvement in the tone of the market noted in our last circular has been maintained throughout the week and there has been a good demand for Cottons while considerable attention has been paid to Rubbers.

The following received by cable are the latest prices on the London market, viz.:

Chinese Govt. 5% Reorg. Loan 1913—B.I. £74.10.0 buyers.
Chinese Govt. 5% Reorg. Loan 1913—F.I. £68.10.0 buyers.
Chinese Engineering & Mining Co., Ltd., "Bearer" £3.5.7½ buyers.
Shanghai Electric Construction Co., Ltd., "B" £19.7.6 buyers.
Chinese Govt. 5% Reorg. Loan 1913—B.I. £76.10.0 sellers.
Chinese Govt. 5% Reorg. Loan 1913—F.I. £70.10.0 sellers.
Chinese Engineering & Mining Co., Ltd., "Bearer" £3.9.4½ sellers.

PONGEE SILK

The China Merchants Pongee Association have received the following cable from their Chefoo head office.

Throughout the week there has been a good demand from Europe and America. Sales of a few hundred pieces being again reported during the week.

Stocks are practically exhausted. Market Firm.

HAIRNETS

In their report on the hairnet market, Messrs. Yannoulatos Bros. (China) state as follows:

The market continues to be very active with a good demand for double mesh nets from Yannoulatos Bros. (China) America. As far as stocks and supplies are concerned the market is in the same condition as previously reported.

The European Markets which have been very quiet for the last few months are again sending sporadic enquiries for single nets. Market firm.

LACES

Messrs. Industrial Export (China) Company write as follows in their report on the lace market:

There has been no business of importance since our last report and prices have declined somewhat. Good quality Filet laces can be bought at 1.4½ per hole and there are considerable stocks in the market. Rose and Leaf patterns, 6 and 9 Hole are as usual a little higher.

Should the present inactivity continue, lower prices may be expected.

There has not been any improvement in the Irish Crochet lace market and prices continue to be weak with very little business, except for Irish Picot.

HANKOW MARKET

The British Chamber of Commerce at Hankow write as follows in their weekly circular dated Hankow, October 11:

Bar silver declined steadily all the week from 35 1-16 ready and 35⅛ forward to 35¼ ready and 35 forward, at which latter rate the market closed weak. New York-London cross rate rose from 440⅛ to 442¾. The official T.T. rate dropped from 3s. 6 5/16d. to 3s. 6 1/16d. on the 9th instant and 3s. 6 1/16d. on the 11th, but there were always good sellers over these rates throughout the week. 4 Months sight credits were placed at 3s. 7 5/16d. during the early part of the week, and were bought later down to 3s. 7d. with probably better offering. Business was considerably brisker than for some time past, and a considerable amount of paper came out. Chinese market rates: Shanghai Tls. 97.425. Dollars local currency 70.275. Native interest 9 per cent.

Exports.—Some purchases of cow hides and sesamum seed are reported, also sample lots of white vegetable tallow. Supplies of wood oil are practically exhausted with the result that the price has risen still higher. Prices for other produce are steady to firm.

Science Imports a Battling Lady-Bug to Save American Apples

Government Entomologists Discover at Last Natural Enemies of the San Jose Scale and Other Tree Pests and Are Turning Them Loose by Millions

By DR. W. H. BALLOU.

A VAST female army—of Chinese beetles — will soon invade the United States to make war on the pests and parasites that destroy American fruit trees.

The Government Bureau of Entomology—relegating sprays, poisons and old fashioned remedies to a secondary place—is applying the same treatment to diseased trees that modern science applies to the diseases of mankind—it seeks out the carrier of the disease germ and then finds a "natural enemy" to attack and destroy it!

The worst parasite enemy that injures the apple trees, peach trees, orange trees and other fruit-bearing trees of the North American continent is the San Jose scale. This scale, which looks like patches of shell-like vegetable fungus, is in reality an insect growth. A winged bug called Aspidiotus Perniciosus lays its eggs in the bark of trees and the insects attach their bodies to the tree bark. The shell from the body, together with secretions, forms the actual scales which cover the bark with dark-gray patches. The scale insect breeds and spreads so rapidly that trees are stunted and killed and sometimes whole orchards are destroyed.

The San Jose scale insect is of Asiatic origin, but gets its name from San Jose, California, where it was first observed in this country. By a sort of "poetic justice" the scientists at Washington have now brought from Asia, the land of the scale's origin, the natural enemy that is to destroy it.

This enemy is a very curious-looking beetle and it has a name as curious as its appearance. It is called "The Twice-Stabbed Lady Bird Beetle." Naturally, it is not a member of the bird family. It is a bug, and "lady bird beetle" simply means a kind of "lady bug." The other picturesque part of the name, "twice-stabbed," comes from the fact that it has two strange, natural markings on its back. You can see them in the large drawing the artist has made for this page, showing one of these insects enlarged many hundreds of times, in the act of laying its eggs amid a cluster of San Jose scales.

This lady bug destroys some of the scales herself, but she lets her own children do the main part of the fighting.

The San Jose scale insect lays eggs on the bark which produce more scales when they hatch out. The lady bug comes along and lays in the same place a crop of her own eggs—hundreds of them. When her little grubs or larvae hatch out they immediately begin to devour the "scale family," literally eating them "out of house and home"—and eating up their "houses," too, for good measure.

The twice-stabbed lady bird beetle is of the same family as the "pitiful lady bird beetle" which was imported from Australia for a similar purpose and has been doing good work.

This method of fighting insect parasites which destroys our crops, by introducing other insect parasites which kill the destroyers, is now being widely used by the Bureau of Entomology. In its main laboratory in Washington are a lot of cages. Confined in the cages, and well fed, aired and watered, are kept hundreds of varieties of insect pests of all descriptions—"living samples" of the various parasites which in the aggregate cost Uncle Sam millions and millions of dollars by destroying one-ninth of the total agricultural products of the country annually.

Introduced into these cages, from time to time, are other parasite insects imported from all parts of the world. Then the scientists watch and keep tab on the various "insect tragedies" and miniature "wars" which occur in the cages when the foreign insects are introduced.

The departmental chief, Dr. L. O. Howard—like a commander over a great human battlefront—examines with anxious eyes the reports handed to him by his observers, and from time to time makes personal inspections along the "line."

Insect parasites are peculiar. They will not select other insects indifferently to devour or destroy or to paralyze and lay their eggs on. On the contrary, they will starve before they will attack a "host" that they don't relish. They also have another strange peculiarity. In order to survive and become permanently established in America they must find not one but at least two kinds of insect hosts to live upon. The female parasite will not lay her eggs in the same species of insect she hatched in, but selects another species for the next generation. The succeeding generation of females go back to the first type of insects selected to infest and destroy. The alternation in the selection of "host" from one generation to another—a mystery which has never been explained—is really a fortunate thing for the entomologists, as one costly imported parasite will attack and destroy at least two kinds of pests instead of one.

The men watching the cages know that the biggest part of their work is finished when a parasite picks out two different species of insect pests. The work of breeding the selected parasites and distributing them broadcast throughout the country then goes forward under the direction of the field workers.

In the case of the twice-stabbed lady bird beetle, which has the San Jose scale insect for one of its victims, the second victim is a small four-winged fly, which also lays its eggs among the scales.

Moths and their larvae and caterpillars are among the worst insect pests the country has to deal with, and the department now has turned loose a number of varieties of insects to fight them. Among them, in addition to the gypsy moth killer, are the Carabid, which devours all soft-bodied insects found near the ground; the Tachinid fly, which destroys alfalfa caterpillars, and the Braconid, which destroys moths of other species.

The parasitic destroyer of the corn borer, which ruins corn, has been found, after much search, in southern Europe. It was brought over and has now been bred in sufficient numbers to begin its liberation. It lays its eggs in the larvae of the corn borer, inside the corn stalk, and when its eggs hatch out they feed on and destroy the progeny of the borer. Great hopes are based on this parasite as an ultimate protector of the corn crops. Dr. Howard believes this parasite will also attack the destructive moth of sugar cane, which is closely allied with the corn borer. At this time a new batch of these "corn-borer parasites" is being liberated on an isolated diseased sugar-cane plantation in Louisiana as a first experiment.

For years in the past—as no other way was known for destroying insect pests—vast sums of money were spent on poisonous sprays—first sprayed over large areas by thousands of men with pumps and hose, and later even from airplanes and automobile "sprinklers." Such methods proved in the long run too costly, though in some cases they still have to be used. The new method of destruction of pests by imported parasites has only a "first cost," after which the parasites spread naturally and perpetuate themselves.

Under Mellow Lights

A LUXURIOUS background is quite necessary to create the proper atmosphere for these costumes of splendor. The social affair must be of the Patrician order to supply the environment for the display of the style charm of these extreme modes. Therein lies the quality of each costume.

Whether one selects the opera or the ballroom, she must be aware that the creations demand a particular grace of carriage if they would breathe fascination.

UNDER mellow lights where soft music plays, you will find the correct Patrician background for the elaborate apparel displayed to-day.

Certain social functions demand this atmosphere. And it is for Milady herself to decide whether the occasion be sufficiently sumptuous for these elaborate creations.

The hat of ostrich is designed for restaurant wear, but its designer advises that a spacious cafe be selected when this particular chapeau is donned.

The foundation of this luxurious chapeau is a simple turban. It is graced with folds of shimmering panne velvet, wound about a soft crown in the line most becoming to the individual features. Sprayed from the sides are the curled ostrich plumes, quaintly reminiscent of court functions. One brilliant diadem of jewels set in platinum accents the splendor of the creation and subtly adds inches to Milady's height.

The gown of soft, pussywillow silk, lavishly studded in crystal beading, is a study in line. The surface glimmers like shining stars under the mellow lights of the ball room and the side panels float into fanciful trains when Milady walks, adding a note of elegance.

When one analyzes the make-up of this gown, simplicity will be found. Cut of two pieces, joined at the sides and draped, ever so slightly, across the front is the line which gives it charm and elegance. The splendor of the creation lies in its material, an exquisite brocaded pussywillow whose design is outlined with fine sparkling beads. A sort of compromise to fashion's skirt length dictate is the unusual hem line. Its pointed front is weighted to a graceful line by the crystal fringe. Yet the new length is not denied as you will see by the long trailing panels that float from either hip line.

Who of us does not find an evening wrap a charming accessory to the costume? And here is a splendid example of an evening wrap that seems but destined to display the new skirt length of the formal gown.

The cape is short, decidedly in contrast to the silhouette that marked the gala function of yesteryear.

It is made of soft silk crepe, beaded in amethyst and collared with dyed blue fox fur to accent that touch of snugness so fascinating in its inconsistency with the sheer, lavishly embroidered fabric that forms the cape itself.

One may choose her evening wrap as she will. For a resume of the fashions of several seasons is offered. Brocades are again in vogue; brocades with chiffon foundations or those of silk. Panne velvets and exquisite satins glimmer fascinatingly beneath the mellow lights of the Patrician function. Take your choice; but choose for your particular personality.

FASHIONS

Between Season Costumes Engage Attention Of Milady

This is the time of year when all ...ses, no matter how elegant and ... perfectly in repair they may ... look shabby and old to their ...ers. Something new is the cry ... the moment.

We are not quite ready for ...ter, we are not quite through with Summer, but we are ready for a new frock of some sort or other. We see hints of new styles and we feel like members of an old-fashioned era as we walk upon the streets in short skirts. We actually need, for our peace of mind, a new frock of some sort or description.

Well, there are any number of between-season frocks which will answer this purpose admirably, and this season more than ever before it seems they are appearing in great abundance. There are the printed silks, the costume blouses, the short, flaring coats, the circular cut crepe dresses. All or any of these are satisfactory for wear upon the street while the weather is in that uncertain condition between warm and cold, and when we just can't possibly bear to wear our Summer togs for another day.

The short coats are, perhaps, the sensation of the season. They have been adopted with great zeal by those who lead the fashions in America. There seems every reason to suppose that their popularity will go right on for many months to come. They have their distinct economical advantages as well as their artistic merits in their favor. They can be combined with a partially worn skirt, provided it is long enough for smartness, and they can be combined with one-piece frocks with the most startling effect of newness.

These little coats are sometimes made with flaring lines, and at other times they are made to fit closely over the hips. But they are always short for coats, while possibly they might be considered long for blouses. One of them is made along the flaring lines which have been more popular. Coats of this varitey are coming into our styles and we find them, on the smart women, looking most ravishing. Some of them are made of suede; others are composed of those heavy, new, embroidered woolen materials: some of them are made of wool brocades. Again, you will find them made of heavy silks and of duvetynes. All are lined with brightly colored silks, so that the linings become part of the coats, even if they do not actually fold over on to the surface of the coats to form an obvious band of trimming.

One coat is made of a suede finished material, which is really a gabrilled duvetyne. Its color is a deep chocolate brown and it is made with a wide and rolling collar that buttons closely under the throat. There are dark brown shiny buttons coat arranged along one side where the coat closes. At the bottom of the little jacket there is a band of a lighter brown duvetyne material arranged to form a trimming and to repeat the color of the dress which is worn beneath.

With these short coats either plain or very full skirts can be worn. It all depends upon the size of the woman who elects to wear them. If she is very tall she can wear the pleated skirt with much more grace than if she is counted among the small ones of the earth. Indeed, for a tall woman a pleated skirt will be found to help out the lines considerably, for in this era of long skirts she of many inches of height must begin once again to look out for the lengthening of her lines. She cannot go too far in this direction, for she runs the danger, always, of looking ridiculous. However, the day of good looks has dawned for her shorter sister, for these longer, fuller dresses have the effect of lengthening her lines and making her take on a slimness of appearance which has been her desire all along. For her these newer styles are the greatest boon.

From abroad we hear hints of kilted skirts to be worn short and flaring coats. This is always a style very much to be desired, for it relieves a possibly ugly line, and the kilted skirt is something of which women, from a long way back, have always approved.

The Jacquette blouses are taking the place of coats for wear at just this season of the year. So, if there is a new something needed for the wardrobe, one cannot make a mistake in buying one of these with becoming lines and contour.

The blouses that are partially coats in design are made with wide sleeves—in some instances with extremely wide sleeves—and they are always long waisted, with wrinkles about the normal waistline, and often with distinct bloused lines arranged over the hips. Usually there is a wide band at the hips, and often there is a buckle to fasten it snugly on one side. There we have the practical long lines of the latest idea in a costume blouse. You can find them in all of the shops, or you can have them designed for your own separate individuality. They are handsome or they are commonplace. But the Jacquette blouse is the thing, and you will make no mistake if you decide to have one of them for use between seasons.

Some of these outside or outdoor blouses are trimmed with fur in the most facinating manner. There are bands of fur about the hips, and there are bands of fur across the sleeves, wide or narrow, as the case may be. Then, there is, often, a fur collar. After all this fur trimming has been applied you have something which looks more like a coat than it does like a blouse, and which, at the same time, is light enough for wear during the between season months which, in a climate of this sort, last for a good part of the year. Another advantage in this sort of costume is that it can be tucked under a top coat when the colder days come along, and after that outer wrapping is removed you are clothed in something that has every semblance of being a dress. So, you see, you cannot make any mistake about purchasing one of these blouses. They promise to last through a great many months and will be as good for one purpose as another.

If you wish to have your own blouses made, you can find the handsomest sorts of materials in the shops. They have silk surfaces and wool backs. They are covered with embroidery; they are a mass of machine stitching making intricate and interesting patterns. They are rich and luxurious in many ways and have every semblance of being either blouses or coats according to the demands of the activities of your day.

Then there are the printed silks. They are much more beautifully patterned than they have been at any time during the past. Also, they are done on heavier qualities of silks. For these dresses you need nothing at all except the silk itself. It is sufficient to make the design that is needed, but it needs to be handled in an artistic and thoughtful way in order that it shall show to its full and best advantage.

A printed dress is being much shown. It is made in quite a formal manner and it shows the really lovely use to which silk of this character can be put. The whole idea of the frock is nothing more nor less than a one-piece frock, the skirt of which is held up on one side into a drapery that does everything to enhance the design of the dress as a whole. You see, the pattern in this way is not in the least interfered with. Instead, there is given that grace and swing to the material which makes it take its place as a distinct part of the modern styles.

One dress happened to be made of one of those Egyptian prints done in colors of tan and dull reds and greens all mixed in together. The bands of plain silk were done in a shiny black, the better to bring out the pattern of the fabric by means of this subtle bit of accent. Then, after that, the lines of the dress were draped to conform themselves to those of the figure in the best and most harmonious manner. On the whole, one of the season's smartest dresses was the result.

There are all manners of printed silks ranging anywhere from the Paisley patterns to those which are very much more distinct in design and more vivid as to the colors which have been employed in their dyeing. They are eminently suitable for frocks of this general character, and for the days which are neither warm nor cold they make an admirable sort of a suit for wear either on the street or in the houses for most of the activities of one's day. Then, when the colder days come along, they, like the blouses just described, will look extremely well when worn under the long and wrapping coats which will be features of the later season's styles.

The hats which are worn with these newer street things are indications of what will be the Winter's styles and what will be worn with the street costumes during all the new season. They are small and fit the head closely, but they are draped in such a way that they have a larger and more roomy appearance than did the toques of last season. Then when there are trimmings, they take very independent ways of their own and decide to jut out into the air at all sorts of angles.

Trimmings of this stick-out-in-the-air variety do much to help the lines of the newer clothes. They prevent that straight up and down appearance which has every possibility of becoming monotonous, for they creat an angle that serves to relieve the line and to add a certain appearance of "chic" to the costume as a whole, no matter what the costume may be.

Of course there are very many large hats to be seen, but usually the hats worn with these mid-season costumes are of the closer and smaller varieties and are designed to look well upon the street even though the weather be a trifle inclement. The trouble with large hats is that they are really fair weather decorations and should be put away in a dark closet the minute a dark day appears upon the scene. And as it is not always convenient to change one's hat with every little deviation of the weather, it would be wise for the mid-season costume to choose a hat which is more or less closely fitting and designed to weather a storm if the necessity arises.

The three-piece suit promises to be the piece de resistance of the whole Winter's fashions, but is possibly a little early for that variety of costume. Since the dress is of heavy material and the coat is of that same fabric, the chances are that the gown as a whole will be too heavy to serve through the last days of Summer and the first Fall months. However, when the time does come for its adoption, it will be found to have more of a place in the sun than it had even during last season when it could not be said to be greatly in the shade.

Some of the dresses made of perfectly plain silks and those that are heavily woven recommend themselves most heartily for between-season wear. They are made merely of masses of drapery. They scorn trimming in any respect. They are built to accentuate the lines of the form and to stop at that. Many of them have been seen during the past week at the smart restaurants and upon the street, for they are the products of a late season which have recommended themselves most heartily to the wear of women who are looking for new things and smart things at this season of the year.

Many of these dresses made of dark blue or black or the darker shades of brown are embroidered most intricately in threads of silver and gold. This embroidery is applied only at the places where it will help to give weight to the silk and add design to the dress as a whole. It is never added as an extraneous trimming, but it conforms to the lines of the dress as a whole and insists upon being a well-considered portion of that dress.

Of panels there are many. They hang lower than the hems of the dresses in almost every instance and there is a decided tendency to repeat the embroidery of the frock, whatever that may be, on the ends of the panels, giving them, thereby, that modicum of extra weight which adds so much to their general appearance.

Some of the panels are pleated and when this is the case, they are apt to swing about in the breeze with more abandon than when they are made of plainer lines and ornamented with embroidered motifs. These panels in many instances literally sweep the floor, even though the skirts are some inches shorter. They are taking the lead decidedly in the direction of longer skirts and they seem gracefully to indicate the fact that, before many more months have passed, skirts in general will have taken the hint and dropped to that lower level.

There is still some controversy, of course, about whether the long skirts shall prevail but to a practiced eye it looks as though the designers are having things all their own way and that another season will see the sweeping skirt an accepted thing.

Hair Ornaments

Since Paris has decreed that the beaded headdress is to be worn with evening frocks, numberless girls and women are now employed in making ornaments which either match or contrast with their frocks.

Various delightful styles can be produced in pearl work. A very handsome spray can be manufactured with the aid of pearl beads in various sizes, the quantities comprising six rows of "seed" pearls, two being the size of ordinary peas and a few of larger size. Very fine white covered wire must be used for the foundation, and the whole art of success consists in threading the beads neither too tightly nor yet too slackly. The center of the 'leaves' that compose the spray must be worked in diamond pattern, using for each leaf 13 of the largest pearls. The wire ends remaining from the pearl cluster must be twisted together in stem form.

Next take a second piece of wire, pass it through the bottom bead of the center of the 'leaf,' thread with 14 seed pearls and pass the wire from above through the right out side bead of the second diamond. Thread 13 more of the small beads and pass the wire (downwards) through the outside bead of the third (and right-hand) diamond. Now thread 12 beads and pass the wire in at the right side of the top bead belonging to the fourth diamond. Again thread—nine beads this time—and pass the wire through the same top bead also at the right side. The three cluster loops which make one side of the 'leaf,' including the point, are now completed.

To complete it, thread 12 beads and pass the wire through the outside bead of the second diamond from the top on the left side, but threading it through from below upwards. Form again the loop of 13 beads and the loop of 14, and when finished twist the wires securely for nipping off. The 'stem,' of about 2in. in length, must be wound neatly round with silk. Half a dozen, or more, of these sprays can be fastened together, and it is, of course, possible to vary the number of pearls forming the clusters or the side loops to suit individual taste.

A delightful wheatear can be manufactured by the home worker in gold oblong beads and gold wire, with a little floss silk. Cut off 18 3in. lengths of the wire, thread each wire with a bead, and secure by twisting the wire. Pass an inch of wire through the bead when ready to bind it into its place by means of the floss silk. A third of this inch of wire must be allowed to project in order to form the beard, while the opposite end must be bound in with the wire stem which completes the whole. Gold thread on reels can be obtained from most drapers. It is necessary that the wires holding the beads be concealed by turning them to the back part of the wheatear, in which position they will be invisible to the observer.

HOW TO "GROW" A NEW COMPLEXION

These are the days of "hustling." In a week we see and do more than our grandmothers did in a year. We are gradually turning nature to be our servant: we use her great forces against herself. We have conquered sea and sky, now our doctors are fighting not only disease, rejuvenating human beings by the injection of animal glands but as yet, only the few can avail themselves of the treatment.

There is, however, one secret of perpetual youth that is in the reach of everyone. Scientists now realise that the only way of keeping the skin young and fresh is to examine Nature's methods and to find some way of imitating her.

In order to explain the new method of keeping the complexion perpetually youthful, one must understand something of the nature of the skin. A baby's skin is always clear and smooth because the outer layer is always invisibly peeling off, and new layers are forming just as fast underneath, so that the exposed skin is always fresh, unwrinkled and "new."

For the first few years of our lives, this peeling is a purely natural process, but as we grow older, we gradually lose the power of throwing off our old soiled outer skins, so that our complexions become lined and yellow, and the new skin has no chance to show itself.

A few years ago, a scientific chemist realised that a little-known substance called mercolised wax, was exactly what was needed to "keep nature up to the mark." It appears that this substance, which is now universally obtainable gently and painlessly assists nature in throwing off the soiled outer cuticle. The skin is thus perpetually renewed, and its clear youthful complexion can be preserved to any age. (Advt.)

A Novel Table Decoration

Below is described a pretty decoration for the dinner table which will retain its freshness for several days.

Cut a piece of material to the size required for the table center, choosing a fabric that has a slightly rough texture (biscuit-colored tussore silk, casement cloth, or unbleached linen will suit the purpose). Work round the edges a very simple, conventional design. Have a piece of good glass cut to the exact size of the material and between the glass and the material arrange some fern or light foliage. The glass will keep the leaves in position and exclude the light—thus ensuring freshness.

As the summer wanes and the foliage of brambles, bracken, and various trees change color, this idea lends itself to many delightful schemes. Pale green material might be used for highly-colored foliage; all-green leaves look best on a light background.

Car Sets Altitude Mark In California Mountains

San Francisco, Sept. 21.—Shattering all California automobile altitude records, a Durant car has climbed to a point in the White Mountains almost half a mile higher than Tioga, highest of all mountain passes in this State.

Willard S. Wood of the Earle C. Anthony, Inc., headed the party on the mountain motoring expedition. Wood was accompanied by Albert Hromatka, a well-known motion picture camera man, and Frank Podas, also of the Anthony organisation.

When it was decided to attempt an altitude record with the Durant, officials of the Anthony company sought expert advice and were referred to a mountain range never before penetrated by a motor car and scarcely heard of by the motoring public." Try the White Mountains on the east side of the Owens River valley," was the suggestion. "If you are able to reach the summit you will be 14,242 feet in the air, or 95 feet higher than Pike's Peak, the highest point an automobile has ever reached in the United States. And you'll be just 260 feet lower than the summit of Mt. Whitney."

The Durant party did not reach the summit of the White Mountains, but the car did climb to an elevation of slightly better than 12,300 feet, which is the motor car altitude record of California, if not for the entire country outside of Colorado, where Pike's Peak, with a good road, invites the motorist to try mountain motoring.

The start was made from Los Angeles after a drive down the coast from San Francisco. When the car left for the climb the thermometer was trying for an altitude record of its own and the climate on the Mojave desert was not any cooler. The car carried three passengers and food for an entire week in the open, in addition to blankets, cameras and a large supply of film. It was a cruel load for the little car to start mountain climbing, but the first day's run brought the party to Independence.

TAKE GAS ALONG

The second day a stop was made at Big Pine to add ten gallons of gasoline to the load and then the climb was made over Westgard Pass to Deep Springs. A study of Geological Survey maps showed that Wyman creek out of Deep Springs offered the most feasible route. And at the ranch it was learned that an automobile had been up Wyman creek canyon as far as Roberts ranch two years ago, but no car had ever been beyond that point and it was believed imposible for any car to travel beyond that point.

The road climbed steadily, and when Roberts ranch was reached after dark on the second day, it was found that the contour maps and altimeter both showed that 8300 feet had been climbed in twelve miles of driving. Roberts ranch being at an elevation of 8300 feet.

Roberts ranch belongs to the Deep Springs property and the cabin and tents being unoccupied, the party put up for the night in comfort, getting the last real rest of the trip.

Two high tension power lines of the Southern Sierra Company run down Wyman canyon carrying power from the eastern wall of the Steera to the mines of Nevada. While they serve an economic purpose they ruin the scenery of the canyon. It was impossible to get a picture without poles and wires being highly featured.

For the first three miles above Roberts' ranch the next morning the going was quite good. The stream was left behind and the road left by the power line builders was in fair shape. It was necessary to pry a pine trunk out of the way, but no serious delay was encountered.

The grades up the side of the mountain began to approximate 25 percent, with only loose rock and earth for traction. For long stretches it was necessary to speed up the motor and drop in the clutch and buck through a few inches at a time. The progress was counted by inches and this was gained only by the hardest punishment a car could be subjected to.

By 5 o'clock that evening the worst of the struggle was over and the Durant scampered over the rim into the level stretches of Saline Flat, which is a wide, sloping meadow two miles in the air. The car rolled easily across the flat, climbed the southern rim and the party put up for the night in a deserted cabin under the pines of Blanco mountain.

The mountaineers spent a miserable night. They were tired and the thin air at 10,500 feet did not satisfy the lungs of the boys. They had headache and spent a sleepless night, with hearts pounding as if with fever.

Next morning the going was easy, although the last vestige of a road died in Sagehen Flat. Through the low sage and grass the way was picked to Big Prospector Meadow and over a ridge into Campito Meadow at an altitude of 11,300 feet. At this point the last water was taken on by the party from a grassy pool in the meadow.

WEATHER FREAKY

In the three days on the mountain just one man was seen—a sheep herder. But human society was not needed to furnish entertainment. The weather did that.

Campito Meadow ended the easy going. From there on it was a battle. The ridges leading up from the meadow to the summit of Sheep mountain are all very steep. The altimeter needle wavered past the 12,000 mark and the pines thinned out and stopped. The car rolled out on a shelf of bare rock and stopped. Below was a forest of stunted and skeleton trees, while above the summit of Sheep mountain towered. It was a sweltering day in Los Angeles, but the members of the party shivered as they were forced to stop at 12,333 feet. Above was a ridge of sliding rock that blocked the passage.

Once beyond this it would have been possible to climb on toward the 14,242 feet set as the goal, but it was impossible. Therefore a halt was called, and after building a little monument to mark the high spot headed back to Campito Meadow and spent the night in the hut with a log fire as company, while a fierce storm raged through the mountains.

The next day's run back to Roberts' ranch was an easy one, although enlivened by several sharp storms and one great cloudburst. A great flood of water chased the party down the canyon and swept across Deep Springs valley just as they reached the shelter of the ranch house. At the height of the storm a shaft of lightning struck one of the power line poles at the mouth of the canyon and it burned with a tall pillar of flame for more than half an hour.

The next day the Durant party rolled into Los Angeles after a day in the heat of the desert, and it was announced that they would gladly recommend Wyman creek and the White mountains as a fine excursion for any one interested in motor car mountaineering.

New Light Law In East America

Hupmobile officials are not expecting any trouble or confusion among owners of their cars as a result of the new tail-light legislation in Massachusetts, it was announced yesterday.

The new law, which goes into effect in January, provides, among other things, that: "No rear lamp, shall be used upon any motor vehicle so operated unless approved by the registrar. Application for the approval of a rear lamp, accompanied by a fee of $50, may be made to the registrar by any manufacturer thereof or dealer therein."

The significance of the foregoing provision is found in a statement credited to Motor Vehicle Registrar Goodwin of that State, in which it is explained that the new law simply aims to make compulsory a tail light which will throw enough illumination upon rear number plates so that the figures can be identified.

At present, it is pointed out, many rear lights merely show red and the number plates are in such a position that the figures cannot be distinguished.

EXPORTS INCREASE

Exports of passenger cars from America in June increased 15 percent over those of May, which in turn had gained 5½ percent over the previous month. Truck exports gained 36 percent in May over the preceding month, but fell off slightly during June.

Ford Makes Use Of Radio 'Phone For His Plants

Detroit, Mich—An industrial feature of the Ford Motor Company heretofore unknown has been revealed here in the announcement that the telephone as a means of communication between four of the largest industrial plants of the Middle West has been abandoned, and for the last two years executives have been using the radiophone to communicate orders and messages from one plant to the other.

The plants thus equipped are located in Springfield, O., Flat Rock, Mich., and the main Ford plants here and at Dearborn. The idea of the departure from accepted industrial efficiency plans is said to be that greater speed and efficiency can be maintained under the present methods.

Two years ago when it was decided to try out the innovation, the executive sent and received straight messages from one plant to the other, but C. R. Voorhees, in charge of the communication system of the Ford plants, asserts that today code is used entirely, and executives in writing out their messages are much briefer and more alert in the transmitting of messages. In 1920, he says that 4,000 messages were handled from the Dearborn unit alone, and in 1921 a far greater number.

So great has the success of the plan been that the units are now being built up to a strength where they can send and receive for nine hours at a stretch, starting at 7.15 o'clock and continuing until 5.15 o'clock p.m. Four operators are constantly employed at the Dearborn plant for several hours and much labor is often saved by this method. So great has been the success of transmitting messages in this manner, that in addition to the plans already outlined, it is said the Ford yacht, the Salia, has been equipped with radiophones so that Ford, when cruising either at sea or on the lakes, can keep in constant touch with the plant and its executives.

August Sales Set New Record For Willys-Overland

The biggest August in the history of Willys-Overland, Inc., was recorded when the last car cleared the shipping department at the big Overland plant in Toledo, August 31.

Fourteen thousand and seven Overland and Willys-Knight cars were shipped. The biggest August business recorded previously was in 1917 when 11,718 cars were shipped. August 1922 deliveries were greater than those in any single month since June, 1920, when 14,032 cars were sent out for delivery to their new owners.

The amazing feature of the August business just delivered is that it by no means represents the capacity of the market. Overland and Willys-Knight dealers are still oversold and clamoring for deliveries.

Brake Should Be Tested Often

Brakes should always be examined with especial care before one starts off for a trip of any length. They should be tested to see that they are free and that they do not "drag" when the pedal and lever are released and that they take hold with an even pressure when the foot pedal is pushed down or the emergency lever drawn back. Brakes should be so adjusted that the car can be brought to a stop without the sudden jerk which follows a "grabbing brake, jolting the occupants, racking the machine and grinding the tires.

The steering gear should also be tested to discover whether it is thoroughly lubricated and that it does not bind or wobble.

Truck Driving Don'ts

To insure better care of its motor trucks by their drivers, one company operating a fleet of Republic trucks keeps the following list of "Don'ts" posted in a conspicuous place on their loading platform.

Don't try racing with a touring car; your truck was built for strength, not for speed.

Wash your truck frequently; a dirty car can spoil a lot of our advertising.

Street car tracks are nice on springs, but hard on tires and steel costs less than rubber.

Don't neglect a loose part, even though it seems to operate more freely that way.

Don't forget to watch the other fellow ahead; a slow stop on your part nearly always costs you a punctured radiator.

Use your brakes when getting "spotted;" platforms were built to load from not for bumping posts.

Don't drive too close to the curb; edge-trimming is a fine institution for pie crusts, but too expensive for truck tires.

The steering wheel is vastly important, but it is well also to give the grease cups an occasional turn.

Don't slide, the rear wheels when stopping; rubber pavement polishers are too much of a luxury.

Tennis And Dances For Auto Campers

Of the ideal motor tourists' camps throughout the United States there is one in Iowa which furnishes a tennis court and a dance hall, while a camp in Billings, Mont., maintains a dance pavilion for the pleasure of its tourist guests. In Denver, Col., a billiard room and a race track are provided, and a camp of twenty-five acres outsides of Salt Lake City, Utah, has movies and lectures. A golf course is included with one of the motor camps in Seattle, Wash.

Courtesy Called In To Prevent Crashes

Automobiles in all parts of the United States will soon be bearing on their windshield a little green and white sticker with "Automobile Courtesy" in large letters over the name of the local automobile club, indicating that the driver of this car is observing the courtesy campaign being conducted by the American Automobile Association in connection with the Chicago Automobile Trade Association and the National Dealers' Association.

"We believe that 50 percent of the automobile accidents which happen on the highways of the United States could be avoided through the use of a little automobile courtesy," said Dal H. Lewis, acting executive chairman of the A. A. A. "Courtesy costs nothing and brings greater results than any other element entering into the driving of an automobile.

"Real automobile courtesy demands that we give the other fellow his share of the road; that we dim our lights when meeting another car at night; that we recognise the fact that the man behind us blowing for the road wants to get by and is not challenging us to a race; in short, it means being agreeable in all these little things that go so far toward avoiding friction."

The American Automobile Association in taking up with its three hundred associated clubs the question of carrying on this campaign is impressing the need for careful observance of traffic regulations as one of the elements of a courtesy campaign. The traffic officer, the association points out, is only a human being placed in a difficult position because of the necessity of enforcing these regulations and a little courtesy toward him will eliminate many of the more trivial arrests that now clutter up our traffic courts.

The whole operation of the courtesy campaign, the A. A. A. points out, depends entirely upon the old principle of the golden rule. "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you."

CLEANING REAR AXLE

The gum and grease that accumulate on the rear axle may be easily removed with a cloth wet with kerosene. A stiff brush will reach the grooves and corners. The cleaning will be easier if the kerosene is warmed.

The TRUSTY TRIUMPH

Incorporated in the new All-Chain Drive 4 h.p. Triumph is the most perfect transmission system yet devised, providing a solid drive with all the flexibility of a belt. It is the mount for solo or sidecar work.

The first four-valve "single" to do over 76 miles in the hour, thus creating a new One Hour World's Record in the 500 c.c. Class, was the recently introduced 3½ h.p. Triumph Fast Roadster with Overhead Valve Engine.

Speed, power, and wonderful flexibility are exemplified in this new Model.

Building A Road Through An Idaho Wilderness

BY JAMES E. HUNGERFORD

The recent completion of the first lap of the Clearwater Highway from Grangeville to Elk City, Idaho, is an event of far-reaching importance, for it opens a virgin area of five hundred thousand acres. In this area are included the great gold-bearing zones of central Idaho, together with large tracts of commercial timber on the Nez Perce national forest. The official estimates place the amount of virgin lumber in this forest at more than three billion feet, of which five hundred million feet will be accessible for removal through the construction of the highway.

In the early days, the old Nez Perce Indian trail to the buffalo country was the sole route of travel, and all freight from Walluala to Virginia City, Montana, and the placer mines of the Black Hills, was packed over it. Like all Indian trails, it traversed the high mountain peaks and summits, to avoid the deep canons on its route through Elk City, and crossed the Bitter Root Divide on to the Nez Perce fork of the Bitter Root valley. Then, eastward, it penetrated the happy hunting grounds of the buffalo land, via the Deer Lodge Valley.

On this trail, Lloyd Magruder, a merchant of Elk City, and the independent Democratic candidate for Congress in 1864, who had packed into Virginia City, and was returning to his home with four other men, was brutally murdered and robbed, on October 11, 1873. One of the thrilling chapters of Idaho history is the account of the discovery of the murderer at his camp near Magruder Mountan, and the final hanging by Lewiston vigilantes.

The historic trail was the only medium of travel from Grangeville to Elk City, until the last Territorial legislature made an appropriation to construct a wagon road from the present town of Clearwater to Elk City. This road, which follows closely the old trail, crosses two mountain ranges on excessive gradients and traverses a heavily timbered country, which is wet and difficult to travel, except in the summer.

The new road will not only eliminate excessive grades and adverse conditions of soil and timber, but it will reduce the distance of sixty miles to forty-five. No other highway in the Northwest offers more scenic beauty, than this South Fork Route, but the new road has more utilitarian purposes in view. Besides the vast stretches of timber contiguous to the new highway, the new road traverses one of the greatest undeveloped mineral countries in the United States.

TO CLEAN METAL

Soap and emery powder, mixed to a paste, are excellent for polishing unpainted metal parts of a car. This compound will remove any rust that may have formed and will leave the surface smooth without scratching.

American Motor Trade Doings

New York, August 29.—One of the new cars to arrive on Broadway last week was the new Earl cabriolet, on exhibition by the Morrow Motor Corporation, 1,761 Broadway. It is a five-passenger closed car, with straight lines, unusually large windows and Spanish leather upholstery.

General Manager J. A. Clark is showing the new Peerless eight at the Broadway and Sixty-third Street salesrooms. The wheelbase is increased to 128 inches and the Delco electrical and ignition system, a new feature, is built integral with the motor and includes independent lighting, starting and ignition system and Exide battery. The steering gear is adjustable with ball thrust bearing.

On Friday, August 11, Overland car No. 900,000 passed through the tester's hands and was delivered in a shipment of cars.

Ten Years Makes Changes In Cars

The award of a gold medal to the Sacramento Studebaker dealer for a display of Studebaker automobiles at the California State Fair recalls a similar award made to Studebaker ten years ago, and emphasises the tremendous growth of the industry and the improvement in automobiles during the past ten years.

"When I think of the cars we had on display at Sacramento ten years ago and compare them, in design, with the modern automobile, I am impressed with the tremendous advance of the industry during the past ten years," said Chester N. Weaver, Studebaker distributor on the west coast. "Motoring in those days was not the joy it is today. That automobile engineers should have been able in the short period of ten years to have eliminated most of the unpleasantness that was attached to the ownership of an automobile is commendable in the extreme."

JUST STATISTICS

According to the latest figures, approximately 10,400,000 passenger automobiles and motor trucks are in operation in the United States. England has a total of 463,000 motor vehicles; France, 235,000 cars; Germany, 91,000; Austria, 85,000, and Italy, 50,000.

Small-Bore Engines

Due chiefly to economic conditions which do not affect this country, the small bore engine is popular in Europe, says J. J. Cole President of the Cole Motor Car Company, who recently returned to the States from a foreign tour.

"In Europe," explains Mr. Cole "motor car taxes are based on the bore of an automobile engine. This has resulted in manufacturers striving for an efficient small-bore engine with a long stroke. Coupled with the fact that gasoline retails abroad for about 75 cents a gallon, it has given the European engineer a decidedly different problem to face. The small-bore European engine is not as long lived as our American engines, because these engines must revolve at a higher rate of speed to be powerful and efficient.

"In this country, where gasoline is cheaper, and where taxes are based on horse power, we need not go to extremes on the small-bore engine. Beyond a certain point American engineers are pausing, in this country, and considering carefully how far they can go safely on this small-bore high-speed engine development. We must not overlook the economy side and the influence on long life and low rate of depreciation of running an engine at high speed.

"Another point to be considered in this connection is the fact that the gears on a small-bore, high-speed car must be shifted oftener and the average American driver does not like to change gears too frequently. Unless a small-bore engine is developed that requires little gear shifting, it will be difficult to get the small-bore idea across from a sales standpoint in this country."

Plans Outlined For Car Plant

A definite outline of plans for the future of the reorganised Locomobile Company of America is given in a letter issued by the company to its branches and dealers. The company now is headed by W. C. Durant. The recent transfer to Durant interests of Locomobile properties at Bridgeport, Conn., evoked so many inquiries as to the company's plans under its new leadership that the letter was designed to give this much-sought information.

It is stated that no radical changes are contemplated either in the policy of the company or in the design of the product. The Locomobile, as now known, with forty-eight horse-power, low speed six-cylinder engine and four-speed transmission, will be continued.

There will be no change in its lines or principles, except such as from time to time the most careful research may dictate for further refinement and improvement of the car and for greater elevation of Locombile standards.

Georgia Would Control Bus Lines

Short line railroads throughout George are attempting to have motor bus lines put under control of the State Railroad Commission. An association composed of twenty-eight of the twenty-nine short line roads has framed a bill for presentation to the General Assembly, setting forth regulations governing motor bus operations which it wants enacted.

DR. O'HARA'S CRICKET TEAM WINS INTERPORT TEST MATCH

Dr. O'Hara's XI beat an eleven captained by G. M. Billings yesterday afternoon by a margin of 48 runs. The game was hardly in in the nature of a Possible-Probable trial, but nevertheless the sides were fairly representable.

Dr. O'Hara was on the top of his form and succeeded in taking 7 wickets for 37 runs on an easy batsman's wicket.

Machine Gun people between them captured all the batting honors. Leach was top scorer with 43 runs, showing that he at least will be in form for the Hongkong Interport. Hayward played an effortless 28, while Foster hit up 32 the way they do in Yorkshire.

Barnes kept splendidly; stumping Leach, O'Hara and Baker all off Hansell which gave that bowler a very good average, 6 for 41.

The weather was glorious all afternoon and the ground in fine condition. Billings won the toss and elected to bat: Hayward and Clifford opened the innings against the attack of O'Hara and Leach. The start was not promising, Clifford being bowled after a few overs for 0; then O'Hara got to work and wickets fell in quick succession, the next five batsmen being out for 15 runs. Hayward however kept his end up and gave the latter batsmen more hope.

He was eventually bowled by Foster for 28 out of a total of 42. The tail contrary to expectation showed up well, Wilson went in and hit a couple of boundaries and partnered by Simpson put on 18 for the 8th wicket, before being caught.

Billings went in next and kept on the good work. Simpson was unhappily bowled by Divecha and Barnes followed. As usual this batsman was not out, Billings made 16 before being bowled by Foster and Barnes unbeaten with 8.

At 3:30 Divecha was bowled by the latter and Leach followed. The batsmen now woke up and hit freely. Billings put on Rawsthorne in his place.

The score continued to creep up. Leach was hitting very well and Deeks was content to stand his ground and wait for the loose ball to come.

When the score reached 46 Deeks unexpectedly put up a rather feeble catch into slip's hands which severed the best partnership of the afternoon.

Middleton followed but was immediately caught by Hayward. Barnes who was playing a good game behind the sticks took advantage of the free hitting of O'Hara and when the opportunity came stumped him.

Soon afterwards he neatly stumped Leach and things looked up a bit. Foster and Baker were batting rather well together when Barnes again took his opportunity and had Baker stumped by a brilliant piece of work.

But the game was just won due to the hitting of Foster who hit high and far, though he was missed twice. Hammond was bowled first ball and the innings eventually closed when Rawsthorne caught Foster off Billings, Muller being not out 11.

American School Sport Notes

FOOTBALL SATURDAY

After a week of hard practice, the football squads at the American School are getting into shape, and will be ready for the first practice games among themselves this week. Coaches Miller and Edmunds have been busily engaged teaching signals, and they are now sufficiently mastered to work out a few simple movements.

Beginning with Saturday, a series of games will be staged between the two squads, which will give them practice and pep, and prepare them for the varsity games, to take place probably some time next month. Straight football, with no frills, will be the order in the first game Saturday. The squads have been exceptionally large, averaging between thirty and forty daily, and are showing much enthusiasm for a form of sport which has for years been ignored in the Orient. The management will be wanting games in a few days, and any light eleven desirous of a tussle with the schoolboys will probably be taken on.

TENNIS ACTIVITIES

The tennis tournament will come off shortly, and many of the players have sent in their names. There are hopes for a very strong tennis squad this year, and they have already demonstrated their ability by their easy win over the Public School men last month. Squires, Wright, Smith and McDaniel are showing good form, and the final outcome is very doubtful.

WINS MILE RUN

Elliott Fisher, Interscholastic mile champion, was in great form yesterday, and ran away with the Harriers' Club mile run, winning in easy style in 5:15 4-5. There seems to be a bright future for this promising runner, and he should be able to go in excellent time in the races next Spring. Tipton, Fisher and Waters were the recipients of handsome prizes—for running events which took place last year—at the meeting of the Harriers Tuesday evening. Tipton won a beautiful silver cup and shield, given to him for winning the mile handicap race last Spring, and Fisher captured a gold medal by placing in a distance run several months ago. Herbert Waters, last year's premier distance runner, also secured a bronze medal. The track team will soon begin active training for the cross-country running, which starts up in a couple of weeks.

First Hockey Game Results In Draw

The Shanghai Hockey Club and the Hockey team of the Range Tennis club played the first game of the season at the Hongkew Recreation grounds yesterday, the contest resulting in a draw after a very prettily played match.

The Range club, who formerly were the old Portuguese Hockey club had the better of it in the first half, scoring one goal to their opponents' nil. After the rest period the Shanghai club players found their bearing, and evened the match. After that it was a seesaw struggle with neither side having any particular advantage.

Public School Boys Defeat Nanyang, 6-1

The Shanghai Public school football team defeated Nanyang college at Nanyang yesterday, six goals to one. The game was the first for both teams, and the score just about represents the respective merits of the elevens as they now stand. The weather was a trifle warm for good football, and this, combined with the fact that the teams haven't yet hit their real stride made the game a bit slow at times.

Today Nanyang will play St. Xavier's at Nanyang.

Mr. A. H. Leslie referred the game yesterday and will officiate again today.

THE SHRINERS

"The Shrine" is well called "The Play House of Masonry." Those of its devotees, who have travelled over the arid sands of the desert and reached the Oasis where in comfort they may dwell, give themselves over to the pleasantries of life and seem to have as a motto "There's a Sun still shining in the sky." But these good folk are not selfish in their joys. They are ready to share them with others. They long to give the delights that hurt not, and by their efforts to delight those whom a sad world has hurt.

And so, the Shriners have set apart next Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday to hold high festival at the Olympic Oasis. The place will be full of noises; full of sweet sounds that give delight and hurt not. Sometimes a thousand twangling instruments will beat about our ears; and sometimes voices in sweet harmony will still the troubles of a fevered brain so that it is refreshed again.

In other words the Shriners are to hold their second minstrel show, and from all we are told it is to be "the best ever."

I once went to a nigger show and found that a chap at the end of the half circle kept asking someone whom he called "Mister Johnston" why a hen insisted in crossing the road. This Mister Johnston always came back with the query "Well, Mister Bones," why does this hen insist in crossing the road?" I cannot remember just now the solution to the problem but I hope to get at it next Wednesday. This "Mister Johnston" fellow was "the whole cheese" in the show, and had to keep things together, as well as that hen, who would make for the other side of the road.

Out here, in this Oriental Oasis, it is Jack Raynes who has been

INTER-COLLEGE TENNIS FINALS ON TOMORROW

The second round of the annual tennis tournament of the E. C. I. A. A. was completed yesterday afternoon, as a result of which Soochow University will meet Nanking University tomorrow in the final round to decide the tennis championship of the association on the Columbia Country Club courts.

Seven of the eight institutions that belong to the E.C.I.A.A. entered teams in the tournament, which it was decided should take place in Shanghai on October 20, 21, and 23. The draw held on Thursday evening resulted in the first round being played as follows: St. John's vs. Shanghai Baptist, Soochow University vs. Fuh Tan, Nanking University vs. Southeastern University, and Nanyang drew the bye.

Soochow and Nanking won their matches easily, the score being 5-0 in each case. St. John's by winning two of the singles matches in the morning and one of the doubles in the afternoon succeeded in eliminating Shanghai Baptist, 3-2.

In the semi-finals St. John's and Soochow met on the Nanyang courts, and Nanking and Nanyang met on the St. John's courts. The issue in each case was left undecided by the play of the morning, Soochow and Nanking winning two out of the three singles matches. In the doubles, Wu and Mao of St. John's won from Liang and Kok of Soochow, in straight sets, 6-1, 6-2. In a hard fought match, Lee and Yang of Soochow succeeded in winning against Mang and Zung of St. John's, 6-3, 3-6, 6-4, which gave the series to Soochow.

The first set between Lee of Soochow and Mang of St. John's deserves special mention for the character of play exhibited, going to 7-7 before Lee finally managed to finish it, 9-7.

HARRIERS CLUB HAS TRIAL RUNS TO START SEASON

Some exciting contests took place yesterday afternoon at Hongkew Park, where the Shanghai Harriers' Club began its season with trial handicap runs. The weather conditions were excellent and there were a good number of spectators around the track, in spite of the exciting hockey and football matches going on near by.

Entries were many and included some American School students, most of whom ran as well as the runners of the Club.

The handicaps were arranged by Messrs. Van Hook, Reneman, Mears and Wilson. Mr. Van Hook acted as official starter and Messrs. Hyndman, Goodhind and Mears were timekeepers.

The 100-yard race was staged first, followed by a mile run and then the 440-yards. Many runners competed in all events. The results were as follows:

100 YARDS

1st—Seredkin
2nd—Reneman
3rd—Marshall

ONE MILE RUN

1st—J. E. Fisher
2nd—T. McKenna
3rd—H. F. Baltan.

440 YARDS

1st—Reneman
2nd—Marshall
3rd—Pierce.

In the 100 yards Reneman, starting from the 3-yard mark, did the distance in 10 1-5. Fisher's time in the mile was 5:15, while in the 440 Reneman's time was 53 3-5, Marshall being a close second.

Every Saturday afternoon the Harriers Club will hold trial and cross-country runs and all who are interested are invited to join in. The start will be at 3 p.m. from the American School, near Darroch Road.

The Tout Gives Slant On Champions Contenders

BY THE TOUT

On arriving at the stand this morning, I discovered a heavy white pall covering the whole of the course; consequently it was a most disappointing and miserable hour and half that I spent.

The grass course was opened with the bamboos out, and a few of the ponies took advantage of it. The fog however was so thick that it was not till after 7:30 that any reliable times could be taken. By that time however, the scribe and the clockers, I am told, went on strike, and decided not to issue any time sheet, as the few that were taken were most unreliable and disappointing. With regard to the penciller, I have no doubt he is a pre eminent cueist, but I do doubt if he can conduct and manage the unruly bunch of jabberers around his table, as old Pappa did Mr. Barley being the chief delinquent.

Subscription Griffins: Now that Mr. Stormes' pony has been scratched, there is some hope of my half dozen, of a very indifferent lot, picking up a race. I must now put Paddington in premia position for he has done one or two decent gallops. Poona I like as an honest, common, old pug, and something may be made of Dash Comrade and Dungannon. Radley has been badly treated and is decidedly 'off' since his owner has schooled him over the jumps. He seems to like this game, and should turn out a godd'un at it. Suomi I hear is a dark horse and should get a place, but his owner I hear feeds him on cheroots. There are two others I hear whispers of that I seem to know nothing about. A grey, that is not kept in the Race Club compound, and Mr. Dallas' small chestnut. Well, I must hunt them out, and keep an eagle eye on them.

Leger Candidates: What was seen of the three this morning was disappointing I hear, for I missed them all, having cleared off by 7:30. The times were given to me however by a mafoo. Oregon did 1⅜ miles in 4.012 and finished in 36, Christmas Card the same distance in 4.04 and finished in 34.2 and Colorado on the grass course in 4.08 last quarter, 35 all out. My fancy is Crowborough, Sunstar and Christmas Card and in the order named. However I may change my mind next week, as several of them did not gallop today.

The Champions: At last Saturday's racing here we had a taste of the Champions. The previous meet at Kiangwan, Nationalist beat Maresfield, he in turn was beaten on this course by Salvation and Old Bill. With Shenkoland and Salvation, one on the wet, and the other on the dry, George Dallas has a very powerful hand. The Hawk, Silver Streak and Christmas Gift, I think, will complete the bunch. At present my opinion, always provided it's a dry course and with shoes off is in favor of Old Bill, Salvation, Christmas Gift.

The latest betting is:
1000—150 Old Bill (t).
1000—125 Christmas Gift (t & w).
1000—125 Salvation (t & w).
1000—125 The Hawk (t & w).
1000—125 Maresfield (w).
1000—70 Silver Streak.
1000—50 Columbia (t & w).
1000—50 Nationalist (offering).
1000—40 Thomas a'Beckett (off).

S.R.C. Second Eleven And Navy Team Draw

The Recs second team were at home to a team gathered from the various gunboats in port. Neither team played up to a very high standard but for the beginning of the season this can be excused. Possibly the Recs missed the more opportunities for scoring but the final result a draw two goals all about represented the play. One of the Navy goals was the result of a penalty for handling. The Recs had a chance to score the winning goal when a penalty was given against the Navy for a similar offence. The Navy goalie managed to keep his charge intact at the expense of a corner. For the Recs the backs G. Manley and E. Cooke and Brockett were undoubtedly the best of the team. For the Navy the goalie and backs were the pick.

NEAR-FAVORITES WINNERS AT MEETING AT KIANGWAN

Neither the outsiders nor the favorites figured in any marked degree in the proceedings on the Kiangwan race course yesterday. The card of nine events—first of the last three meetings of the year at Kiangwan—afforded an exhibition of racing of first quality. Times recorded perhaps were the best of the fall season. The weather to be moderate about it, was gorgeous, the track was in the best possible condition and the throng was big and full of enthusiasm. But let it be said, it certainly was a hard day to pick 'em.

With a few exceptions when favorites fulfilled expectations it was a banner day for those starters which, while not taking rank as favorites, come under the vague classification of 'having a chance,' a class that has a fair measure of support in every race and therefore, with these ponies making good, payments in general ran somewhat above normal level without at any time going to extraordinary heights.

SKYSCRAPER WINS

One of the significant performances of the program was the victory in the fifth race of Skyscraper, ridden by Mr. Crokam over the mile distance. Salvation, long favorite and ridden by Mr. A. N. Dallas ran a dead heat for third place in this race with Association, ridden by Mr. Haimovitch while Nationalist, with Mr. Brand up, took second place. This upset scored the biggest payment of the day running to $78.80.

Silver Streak, one time Champions winner and again a contender this year, appeared yesterday under its owner Mr. John Johnstone who has been away for a long time, and though the pony was accorded the place as top favorite in the third race over a mile and a quarter the race was won by Patsfield, ridden by Mr. Morriss while the second favorite, South Down, ridden by Mr. J. K. Brand, took second place. Silver Streak got third in the race.

Following yesterday's meeting the Kiangwan Leger is to be staged next Saturday and the final race meeting at Kiangwan this year, The Challenge Cup, will be held on November 25.

FOREIGN LEAGUE BASKET BALLERS SHAPING PLANS

On Tuesday evening at 8:30 p.m. the first meeting of those interested in the Foreign Basket Ball League will be held at the Chinese Y.M.C.A., 120 Szechuen Road. At that time officers will be elected and plans made for the 1922-23 season, which will probably start about the first of December as usual.

It is of essential importance that representatives of any teams expecting to play this year be present at this meeting, so that the new officers will be able to estimate definitely the size of the league. Pre-season gossip has it that the Public School is contemplating entering two teams, one of players at present in school, and the other composed of alumni. The American School will, of course, have one strong team, and it is probable that the two Rowing Club teams and the Bearcats of last year's league will also play again this year. The plans of the other teams such as the Shanghai College, Fearon Daniel, Y.M.C.A., American Trading Company are not yet known, but it is certain there will be enough entries for a strong eight-team league.

Everyone who has ever played basket ball or who is interested in playing this year is urged to attend this meeting and get lined up with one of the clubs. Among those who are expected to appear on the gymnasium floor this season are: Neprud, the Nash brothers, Coulcher, Goldman, the Day brothers, Campbell, Hale, W. Smith, Heinzerling, Dr. Gray, Lewis, Roxburgh, Pettit, Swan, Elliott, Hirsh, Anderson, Hipps, Poteat, Van Hook, Squires, Levis, C. J. Smith, Kay, Sheldon, Kline, Wilhelmi, Pollock, Maloney, Irle, and a bunch of newcomers.

Last year's schedule was run off very successfully and it is hoped that everyone interested will work to make this year's record equally as good.

"Recs." vs. Chinese Recreation Club

In spite of a field that was rather short and a ball that was a little on the light side a very enjoyable game was played. From the start the S.R.C. team overwhelmed their opponents and only excellent play by the home backs and some wonderful saves by the goalie prevented a big score before half-time. As it was the S.R.C. team crossed over leading by two to nothing.

During the second half the C.R.C. team was seen to better advantage but the visitors' defence proved too strong and custodian Borras only handled the ball once in the whole game.

An individual effort by Tom Wade who carried the ball from the half way line to within a few yards of the goal passing to A. Sofoulis at just the right moment to allow the latter to score, Mears headwork which appealed especially to the Chinese spectators and C. J. Smith's work at right half were perhaps the outstanding features. It is difficult to single out individual players and every member of the team deserves credit for the victory by five to nil.

The Chinese Recreation Club played a very sporting game and their hospitality and the good feeling that prevailed contributed to a very pleasant afternoon.

FRENCH CLUB TO BE SCENE OF BIG TENNIS TOURNEY

Preparations are now well advanced for the holding of the open lawn tennis tournament to be held during the Race holidays on the grounds of the Circle Sportif Francais on the following dates: November 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11 and 12, play commencing each day at 2 p.m. sharp.

This annual event which is being held for the tenth year in succession has always achieved great popularity amongst the Tennis community of Shanghai and judging by the number of entries already received this year will be no exception.

The Tournament comprises the following events: Hardcourt Championship, Gentlemen's Singles and Doubles, Ladies Singles and Doubles and Mixed doubles; also Grass Court handicaps, Gentlemen's Singles and Doubles, Ladies Singles and Doubles and the ever popular Handicap Mixed Doubles American tournament. In the latter event each couple plays each of the other couples 48 strokes both couples starting level, and the couple winning most strokes after deducting from or adding to the grand total the handicap, which is not disclosed till the finish wins the tournament; by these means the interest is kept alive until the last game has been completed. First and second prizes will be given in all events and third prizes if sufficient entries are forthcoming.

The tournament which is the only one in Shanghai that is run on the homeside principle of continuous play from day to day, is in the hands of the following committee: Messrs. Deschamps, Elmore, Hargreaves, Hutchison and Toussaint.

Entries which are open to all residents in Shanghai close at noon on Saturday, October 28. Entry forms may be obtained from the Honorary Secretary and Treasurer, Mr. J. Forbes Cale, 17 Foochow Road, or from the Circle Sportif Francaise.

Sport And Stage

keeping all the hens and all the cocks on his side of the road. He has been training them to outrival their feathered brethren of the farmyard. He says that:

After Sundown, when the day is over,
After Sundown, when the day is done,
There'll be dancing, singing, all over town,
When the minstrels ring their curtain down;
There'll be humming of all the best songs,
There'll be dancing like Glemby does;
And Mark Hanna's buck dance, won't give the girls a chance,
So to Moutrie's for your tickets Buzz Buzz.

Lee Solomon gave me a peep at the program yesterday and it looks like some of these home made candies that the American women put up at their Fair last night. Good and enjoyable right through. Among the end men you might recognise under the tan people like Glemby, the man who can keep his own and other people's Aar-on. Then there is Mark Hanna, who doesn't care for the Mark if he can only persuade you to invest a dozen Mex. Doc. Irons is going to sing. He is learning a song to hum to his patients when they are in the fatal chair. It runs something like this:

With a long, long pull,
And a strong, strong pull,
Cheery boys let her go,
For your here, forsoothe,
To get out that tooth,
So once again, pull. Yah! Ho!

"Bill" Tenney will also be there. He isn't like Aaron a bit 'cause he hasn't any hair to keep on but he wears a wreath of smiles which are just as good. B. S. Barnes—the B. S. does not stand for Brandy Soda. The initials have got twisted somehow. They should be S. B. which being interpreted by the lassies is Some Boy. He will be there too. And, steady! Put the break on. There's Lurton at one of the ends. He is going to speed things up somewhat although he jumps on others for speeding. That makes quite a nice little sextette, doesn't it?

The program is divided into three parts. First of all you get the real old minstrel show. Then there is an Olio. I haven't the faintest idea what that is but I notice that quite a lot of entertainment should be got out of it. Those Silas fellahs are carrying a piano about with them: and Jack Rayner has gathered together four lads who are going to sing together if possible. If they do it ought to sound quite nice 'cause all the different notes have been added together by Mena and Jack.

I'm glad to see Brooke's name. He has a wonderful voice. He speaks and sings so low that you can feel the ground beneath you vibrate with applause.

The end of it all will take place on the banks of the Mississippi in the days when there wasn't an Eighteenth Amendment and when a thirst could be easily quenched.

So I'm going, yes I'm going,
To the Land of Cotton Growing,
To that Ole black mammie o' mine

on Next Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

RELATED KNOWLEDGE

By the way Kimball is going to appear in the Shriner Show as a Darky Preacher. That calls to mind the story:

The preacher was Scotch, and of the old school, who believed in a physical hell, and he was preaching one of the good, old-fashioned, fire and brimstone sermons. With awe-inspiring gestures and appropriate pulpit pounding, he brought a particularly fiery discourse to a triumphant close with something like the following:

"And on the last day there ye'll be, all ye wickut sinners, up tae your necks in the sea o' brimstone, and the flames'll be roarin' round ye, and ye'll no hae a drappie of water to wet your parched throats, and there'll be wailin' and gnashin' of teeth, and ye'll be crying out unto the Lord, 'Oh, Lor-rd, we did not know—we did not know!' And the good Lord, in the infinite mairey and compassion of His loving hear-rt, will say, 'Weel! Ye ken the noo!'"

NEHF, MEUSEL AND KELLY COMING TO EAST WITH TEAM

(China Press Service)

New York, Oct. 17.—At least three of the world champion Giants and at least three of the Yankees who won the American League pennant and were then defeated in the World Series will be included in the combination major league team which is to leave this month in charge of Herbert Hunter to tour the Orient.

Artie Nehf, pitching ace of the World Series just over: Emil Meusel, left fielder, who won fame with his bat in the series, and George Kelley, first baseman, are the three Giants who are certain to make the trip. "Bullet Joe" Bush, one of the greatest pitchers in the American League, and Waite Hoyt, hero of the 1921 World Series, both from the Yankees' pitching staff, and Hoffman, Yankee catcher, are also certain to go to the Far East.

Among the others who will make the trip are: Griffith, Brooklyn outfielder; Sewell, shortstop, and Stephenson, second baseman, both formerly of the University of Alabama team and now of the Cleveland Indians; Strunk and Falk, both outfielders in the line-up of the Chicago White Sox, and Johnnie Lavan, shortstop of the St. Louis Cardinals. All have been chosen not only for their playing ability but also for their gentlemanly conduct on and off the field.

The team is expected to reach Yokohama October 31 and will open in Tokio a few days later. They will also play in Osaka, Kobe, China, the Philippines and Hawaii.

The above dispatch shows that Hunter's team has been altered considerably since the last word received here. The most important omission from previous advices is the name of Rogers Hornsby who has forgone the trip to the Far East because of an offer for his presence on some other winter team.

TIME & CHANGE

Time has had its effects on most things It has not, however seen any change in the quality of the Three Castles Cigarettes.

Away back in the early-days of the tobacco industry, the manufacturers of this famous cigarette were noted for the purity, flavour, and fragrance of their product. Those standards have been maintained, and to-day there is no better Virginia cigarette than "Three Castles."
